Barrington Local Happenings Told In Short Paragraphs

CONSOLATION.

We wish for days that are no more,
We mourn the loss of pastime dead;
We sing the threnodies of yore
And weep the tear of pleasures fled.

Yet o'er the pathways of today
Some lingering roses still may lean,
And where our doleful footsteps stray
Sweet flowers shall springing, all unseen.

Alert, the ear may catch the trill
Of bird song carolled in the tree,
And voices from the air to fill
The soul with present ecstasy.

Above the dreaming, did we hear
The clarion tone of duty's call
To sympathy with things near
That wait our joyance more than all—

Soon would we breathe the purer thought
That sets the stagnant pulse astove,
And to our lifted hands, unsought,
Will come the answering touch of love!
—John Treland.

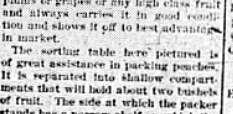
SHIPPING PEACHES.

The Six Basket Carrier Is Used For High Grade Fruit.

Peaches were formerly shipped in what was generally known as the Delaware basket. Now the best peaches go to market in the six basket carriers. This is a neat slat carrier somewhat like a berry crate containing six veneer baskets, holding about a half peck each. This package carries the tenderest peaches to market in good condition.



SORTING TABLE FOR PACKING PEACHES.

and as they look well on arrival they usually sell for the top price. This package is to be recommended for shipping all first class fruit. It is too expensive a package to be used for any but the first grade of fruit. Probably no better fruit package for fine fruit has ever been introduced than the six basket carrier. It can be used for plums or grapes or any high class fruit and always carries it in good condition and shows it off to best advantage in market.

The sorting table here pictured is of great assistance in packing peaches. It is separated into shallow compartments that will hold about two bushels of fruit. The side at which the packer stands has a narrow shelf on which the veneer trays are placed while being filled. In the bottom of each compartment is a canvas—1, 2, 3—which is tacked to the upper edge opposite the sorter. This keeps the fruit from bruising and facilitates the worker's movements in drawing the fruit toward the trays. In the veneer trays or baskets each fruit is fitted into place. Unless the grade is extra large it holds two layers. The table, as will be seen, is constructed in sections which alternate so that fruit may be dumped on the table from either side and the trays carried off handily when filled.

HANDY PICKING BASKET.

The second cut shows a handy picking basket for peaches. As will be seen it is made from an ordinary Delaware basket. The strap goes over the shoulder of the picker and leaves both hands free for gathering the fruit. When filled the basket is easily dumped by unhooking the snap.—Maryland Experiment Station.

Kansas Grain Crops.

If most of those who are supposedly well informed as to Kansas grain crops and their relative importance were asked to name the four they suppose most largely grown, the chances are that wheat would be put first, corn second, oats third and rye fourth. This order would no doubt be generally accepted without question, but the fact is barley has superseded rye in the quartet, and of course corn should head the list, as it is the most valuable product of Kansas soil. Kansans, however, are prone to give wheat the greatest prominence, because Kansas is the leading wheat growing state in the world. As to the competition for fourth place, the statistics are interesting as given in the latest report of the state board of agriculture.—Kansas Farmer.

Sugar Beet Industry.

The benefits from growing sugar beets do not stop with the crops. They are felt in stock production as well. No farmer can begin to appreciate until he has experience the value of molasses and sugar beet pulp—of products of the sugar factory—as a food for stock. Of these every sugar factory is turning out at least half the original weight of the beets. Pulp is immediately available for the farmer's use. It is easily stored and kept. As a rule, it is considerably cheaper than any other feed he can buy or produce. Usually this pulp can be purchased at the factory for 25 cents to $1, per ton. Such low prices must necessarily continue for some time.—C. F. Saylor.

Gentlemen in Court.

At an assize court just at Maidstone was engaged in passing sentence on a prisoner when one of the officers of the court annoyed him by crossing the gangway beneath him with papers for members of the bar. "Don't you know," cried the judge, severely addressing the official culprit, "that you ought never to pass between two gentlemen when one of them is addressing the other?" Having thus relieved his mind, the judge proceeded to pass sentence of seven years' penal servitude on the other gentleman.—London World.

The managing director of a London cab firm with 1,300 horses told a county court judge they worked their horses seven days a week in the London streets. The average life of a cab horse in London was about six years, but some would go only three months, some would last twelve years.
