They Agreed.

To his valet no man is a hero. Even his caddie is apt to hold the highest in very low estimation. The latter discovery was made the other day by a certain legal luminary who already had quite a modest opinion of his own abilities, though he has been for many years an ornament of the bench and is himself the son of a judge. During his off days he usually divides his energies between golf and dairy farming. On the occasion in question it happened be golf, and, not being in his usual form, he made a very bad foozle.

He gazed incredulously at the ground, looked inquiringly at his club and, having apparently solved the difficult problem, faced his caddie and exclaimed, with emphasis, "Well, I am an ass!" The caddie, startled out of a dream of bliss, was too well trained to contradict his employer, so he solemnly replied, "Yes, sir!" The man of law had overlooked the other's existence, but this candid opinion recalled him to earth. He looked at the caddie, and the caddie looked at him for a brief second. Then both burst into a shout of laughter. The humor of the situation had struck them simultaneously.—London Tatler.

Buried In Woolen.

In 1670 an act was passed in England requiring the dead to be buried in woolen, the purpose being to lessen "the importation of linen from beyond the seas and the encouragement of the woolen and paper manufactures of this kingdom." A penalty of £5 was inflicted for a violation of the act, and as frequently people preferred to be buried in linen a record of the fine appears. For example, at Gayton, Northamptonshire, we find in the register: "1708. Mrs. Dorothy Bellingham was buryed April 5, in Linnen, and the forfeiture of the Act payd, fifty shillings to ye informer and fifty shillings to the poor of the parishe."

Pope wrote the following lines on the burial of Mrs. Oldfield, the actress, with reference to this custom:

"Odious! in woolen! 'Twould a saint provoke,"
Were the last words poor Narcissa spoke,
No, let a charming chintz and Brussels lace
Wrap my cold limbs and shade my lifeless face.
—Chambers' Journal.

An Ice Telephone.

In laying the telephone wires to the Regina Margherita meteorological observatory on Mount Rosa it was found impossible to use either the overhead or underground method. The snow and glacier ice prevent the latter and the fear of storms the former. On the other hand an insulated cable would sink in the ice if laid on it. So the plan has been tried of laying the wire on the ice itself, trusting to the ice for insulation. This is the highest telephone line in Europe, the observatory standing at a height of 14,526 feet.—London Standard.

To Our Poor Relations.

There is no way a woman can be so sweet to poor relations in the country as to send them a package of old clothes by freight, with a postal card telling of the time when everybody in the village will have the news of the expected second-hand clothes before the postal card gets out of the postoffice.—New York Times.
