CRILLON, Crillon was imported from France by McLaughlin Bros., of Columbus, Ohio, as a two-year-old and came to Wisconsin the following spring and was kept in service there until September of 1909, when he was brought for service at Hawthorne Farms.

He is registered in the stud book of the Percheron Society of America, which is a government approved association. Crillon is a true type of the Percheron breed, lasting good, clear, flat bone, the best of feet and legs with action and quality exercised by none of his weight. He is a sire and progenitor breeder, getting from 50 to 60 per cent of his mares in foal. His colts are perfect drafted, possessing the bone and feet, combined with the weight and action, which go to make up the horses the markets demand today. He has produced more 1400 horses than any other stallion in Wisconsin. His colts find ready buyers and the right customers. Crillon is a sire in every way. Having winning and the right combination of requisites, breeding of stallions in Wisconsin every year, Crillon has been kept in service in this state. He has been duly examined and licensed for service according to the Illinois Stallion Registration found for the season of 1911.

This stallion is worked with a team on the farm every day, except during the breeding season, when he is given sufficient exercise to light driving and the freedom of a large stable, which is well adapted to him in the best breeding condition, so that he produces large, healthy, robust colts.

Crillon is a uniform and tried breeder and should do much to improve the class of horses in this vicinity. Parties having mares contemplated this spring should come and see this stallion before the season opens.

Crillon is licensed as Pure Bred No. A. 5166

Crillon will be kept at the West Farm (Dunning farm) near Goose lake for the season of 1911. Season opens April 1.

TERMS: Single service, $8.00; season service, $12.00; to insure a mare in foal, $15.00; to insure a standing foal, $20.00.

Parties wishing to breed before the regular season opens should make engagements either by telephone or mail.

GIRDLING OF ORCHARD TREES

Loss and Injury Done by Mice, Rabbits and Woodchucks Estimated at $1 Per Acre Yearly.

(By H. F. Ballou.)

Little data is available which would render possible anywhere near a correct estimate of the loss of and injury to trees, young and old, through the work of mice, rabbits and woodchucks. While the loss is confined principally to newly set orchards, or plants in older orchards and the younger plantations generally, this loss, in the aggregate, is considerable. It certainly would not be far beyond the bounds of conservatism to figure the loss and injury at one dollar per acre per year including all ages and conditions of apple, pear and plum orchards.

The case of loss would be less than this in large commercial plantations, even where the grass-mulch method of culture is practiced, for the commercial planter generally takes into consideration the various sources of danger and makes provision to meet these with effective means of protection. With the average home orchard the danger is greater than in the large plantation, and the possible means of protection more generally disregarded or overlooked.

If young trees be girdled in late spring just as growth is beginning, they may be successfully treated by binding about the wounded parts a heavy covering of smooth tenacious soft clay. A new bark will sometimes form beneath the clay if the inner bark or cambium be not entirely destroyed. It is safer, however, to insert a few long scions.

This is called bridge-grafting. The sap circulation of the tree, cut off by the wound made by the rodents, is resumed through the scions which become a part of the tree—enlarging and growing together until, in after years, only a slight enlargement or "bulge" on the trunk of the tree thus treated will be noticeable.

In bridge-grafting, the wounds should be made clean and smooth with a sharp knife and covered entirely with grafting wax. The scions should be cut a trifle longer than the space to be bridged so that when they are inserted, their curving form will tend to keep them firmly fixed in position. The two ends of the scions are cut to a thin, wedge form. Incisions are made in the bark with a narrow chisel—those above the wound sloping upward and those below sloping downward. Insert the scions firmly and use lasting and securely all wounds made in the operation, especial care being exercised to press the wax in firmly and neatly about the point of union of scions with the body of the tree.

To make grafting wax melt together four parts by weight of resin, two parts of beeswax and one part of tallow. Pour the mixture into a pail or tub of cold water. As the mass begins to cool and it can be handled, grease the hands with tallow and roll and work the lump of wax until it becomes quite light in color, rolled into small balls or sticks for convenient use. Keep it well keep in good condition indefinitely.

When to Spray.

The proper time to spray fruit trees can be determined only by watching the fruit buds and weather. The first application should be made before the first rain after the blossom buds have been exposed, but before they have opened; the second, after two-thirds of the petals have fallen; being sure to get the mixture on ahead of the rain; and the third about two weeks later. Watch the fruit buds and the weather.

Wounds on Trees.

For wounds on trees, melt rosin and pour three parts to one part of purchased warmed crude petroleum. This will not run in warm weather nor crack in cold.

Three in One.

"In going through a big wholesale house the other day," said a New Yorker, "I saw something that may be old to you, but was a new one on me.

"A girl was pounding on one typewriter, and by electrical connections was running two others. The copies are much better than when manifolded on one machine."

Pongee Silk.

Pongee silk is the undyed silk of silkworms fed on the leaves of the scrub oak chiefly, though other trees are used in some portions of the pongee district. The silk is produced almost exclusively in Shansung province and portions of North China immediately adjacent.
