Surprised Philip Hawley

A party of ladies and gentlemen to the number of 30 invaded the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Hawley Monday evening. The crowd assembled at the call of Mrs. Hawley who arranged a surprise for her husband. That gentleman arrived home shortly after 8 o'clock and was completely surprised. The party was a merry one and the evening heartily enjoyed.

Conch—six handed, non-progressive kind—was played and prizes awarded as follows; Ladies' first, Mrs. Fred Kirschner. Gent's first, George J. Hager. Consolation prizes were given Mrs. Kendall and George J. Jencks.

A bountiful supply of refreshments was served.

Sickening Shivering Fits

of Ague and Malaria, can be relieved and cured with Electric Bitters. This is a pure, tonic medicine; of especial benefit in malaria, for it exerts a true curative influence on the disease, driving it entirely out of the system. It is much to be preferred to Quinine, having none of its drug's bad aftereffects. Mr. Munday, of Henrietta, Tex., writes: "My brother was very low with malarial fever and jaundice, till he took Electric Bitters, which saved his life. At Geo. C. Roberts & Co. drug store; price 50c, guaranteed.

AN OPINION

Called Forth by an Answer to a Query in Last Weeks' Issue

To the Editor:—

"I was quite amused at the oracular way in which the editor answers the enquirer who asks, "What is the difference between playing cards for a prize and writing a story of a steamship trip for a premium." But I fail to see whether there is not another side to that question.

"When we have finished our game of cards, if we win, we are in possession of what? Of skill? perhaps. Of wit? No. Intellectual preferment? No. Of luck? Largely. If we fail then what have we? A lot of wasted time, perhaps a sour disposition, or a ruffled temper because some trumped ace or made some equally exasperating play. Is there anything lasting for the loser? Not a thing, unless it be the memory of a pleasant time spent and a few choice bits of gossip.

"Now, let us see what we have left when we have finished our story.

"First, we have been listening to a complete series of articles founded on facts and compiled with care, and acquired a fund of useful knowledge. We shall be able to converse more intelligently upon subjects pertaining to such a trip. For instance, we have learned that the big steamers which ply across the Atlantic ocean consume 1500 tons of coal daily; have a good idea of the topography of the country through which we are supposed to pass; descriptions of historical sites and features; in fact it is an educator of the first character. Then in writing the story we have reviewed these points and called into action certain literary talents; certain powers of imagination and description which are sure to be a lasting benefit.

"These things come to all who participate, and to the winner comes in addition, the satisfaction of knowing that the premium has been awarded, not as a matter of luck or clever shifting of a few pasteboards, but as a result of mental development and bodily ability to express his thoughts in a terse and pleasing manner.

"Now, in view of these facts, I believe every fair-minded person will see a wide difference in the two efforts."

SUBSCRIBER.

[We heartily agree with the writer of the above opinion. The argument is sound, but the question was not as to the difference in benefits derived from writing a descriptive article for a premium and playing a game of so for a prize, but the difference in the motive for doing so. In both instances the trophy is the attraction—it assures satisfactorance and interest. Contestants at cards, spelling matches, croquet, description of voyages, where prizes are offered are all in one class because they are in the contest to "beat" "the other fellow." There is no particular harm in such amusements unless they are carried to excess and the rivalry such as to sever friendly ties and engender animosities.—Ed]

HEARD AND SEEN BY HACKNEY.

I am in receipt of a dainty little note the chirography of which is neat, the paper as highly perfumed as a lumberjer-cress-salad, it was dropped in the Review item box and addressed to "Mr. Hackney." The writer of the note wishes to know "whose business it is if a girl happens to set down on the sidewalk as long as she don't break anything?" Well, sister, it is the concern of no one but yourself even though you break something. You may sit down on the cold, hard pavement as often as you deem proper, but when it comes to money there, you come under the jurisdiction of Marshal Dunlea. "Settings" should take place at home.

Rev. George Campbell of Austin writes: "The Lord has patience and an absolute sinner but little respect for a whining, long-faced hypocrite." If Rev. Campbell is correct in his interpretation of the Lord's ideas and likes there are a number in this village who will never reach the city whose walls are of jasper and streets paved with gold

Revivals are carried on here pretty regularly and the ministers succeed in saving a number of young men, but somehow or other they don't save enough to supply the old mills.

While some parents in this village are worrying about their sons and what they are doing while from under the parental roof, they might give a little thought about their daughters. It is not pleasant to say, but it is true that should the writer of this item give to the public the information he knows of there would be a scene in more than one household. The parents are to blame. They do not guard their daughters. Everybody at home evenings. But if absent make it your duty to know where they are and in what kind of company.

It seems hardly creditable, but the story is vouched for by a lady whose word is golden, that a male residing in this village came home from Chicago the other night late—very late. He carried a quart bucket of oysters. He sneaked into the house very quietly, set his shoes in the kitchen table and shoved the bucket of oysters behind the coal heater. Such absent mindedness in one so good professedly is astonishing.

It does beat all how people will grumble at the advent of the tax collector. Just now Barrington is enjoying spasms because there is pronounced increase in the tax rate because of a long needed public improvement. One, a broad-gauged, public spirited, dyed-in-the-wool prohibitionist, who formerly made the traffic as bad as a Dowieite does tobacco and drugs, now argued that the saloon license be placed at $800 to "help him pay his taxes." Here is a piece of nonsense, without enamel. Tax the liquor vendor an increased fee to "help pay your individual debt" and then hammer him because he sells under the privilege you grant him. There is not an iota of justice in any such way of doing business.

The channel plot had left its station, the under coat of her chain, and as the outer harbor bar was passed the passengers and crew joined in singing "Out on An Ocean All Boundless We Ride." On the bridge was a master who had crossed the storm-swept Atlantic before, at the helm was a lassenman in the uniform of the L. Z. G. C.; on the quarter deck were a number whose names are household words in this inland town—they had to land mentioned in holy writ. Three hours out the ship's surgeon was worse, the stomach pumps. The cry was "Give us Bromo or Give Us to the Sharks." "A Sail!" cried the lookout. The pilgrims rushed to the starboard side. The ship shifted her ballast. The pilgrims shifted what little they had left. Among the pilgrims were several communists and they mutinied because the ship's rules forbid card playing aboard. They were put in irons and confined to the steerage. Land was sighted the 6th day out. Natives were noticed upon the coast, and the ship's prow turned toward the shore that the lady pilgrims might see the latest modes in feminine adornment and a collection be taken for the American heathen. The L. Z. G. C. representative discovered among the natives one against whom he had an outlawed judgment and proceeded to collect it when a man-eating lion appears and devours the L. Z. G. C. delegate, hair and all. The lion is captured, sacrificed upon the promenade deck, and with the lamb inside of him is buried at sea while the ship's choir chants "Rocked in The Cradle of the Deep." A deacon takes the helm and the ship sails on! On! On! The lookout: "A whale!" "A whale!" cries the lookout. "Pull for the Shore Sail or!" shouts the pilgrims. A probation member is given to the whale and the voyage resumed. Gibralter is passed and we view Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli. As the orb of day is rising on the city of Jerusalem we are awakened to gaze upon the harbor of Alexandria. This is merely an "imaginative" voyage.

A Grim Tragedy

is daily enacted, in thousands of homes. Death claims, as its victim, another victim of Consumption or Pneumonia. But when Coughs or Colds are properly treated, tragedy is averted. F. G. Then she took Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, which cured her in a few days. She is well and strong." It kills the germs of all diseases. One dose relieves. "Sunset"

The afternoon has been mild and warm and the sun like a bold sentinel is nearing the end of his beat. The shadows grow longer while all nature is at rest in her grandure and sublimity. The soft melody of birds is wafted through the tree tops and the sweet zephyrs of Spring fall lightly upon us as does the sun approach the opening of night's sepulchre. As he nears the western horizon he changes from the dazzling yellow to a glowing golden and soon seems to stand on the earth as a mighty red ball of incomceivable composition. But in that glory it is but a moment's vision, for he sinks and he melts away and but more than half is seen, and then the upper rim only is left peeping o'er the western hills to bid us adieu.

So the bright lord of day has vanished beneath the golden horizon and the scattered clouds are kissed to glory by his parting rays.

His last work was to leave behind a scene painted on earth's azure canopy so grand and too beautiful to comprehend. The artist cannot paint it nor can the completest vocabulary describe it. When he passes beyond that intermingled fringe of gold and red the colors deepen and spread farther back into the heavens. Twilight comes on apace and purple-skirted clouds curtain the crimson air.

Thus dies the day in the west.
