AN OLD TIME FOURTH OF JULY

THE Fourth of July was the day upon which every boy fell that he had an inalienable right to make all the noise he could. Every firecracker was to him a stream of joy that the veterans had tri umphed, and every rocket that pierced the sky, dropping a trail of sparks be hind it, was a shriek of delight that the carnage of battle was ended. Thirty years ago no boy in town wanted to be in bed after the church clock had rolled the hour of 12 o'clock on that morning. Creeping out of bed in the darkness, boys dressed hastily and silently made their way to the street. The stars were shining brightly above their heads, and the air was a bit chilly. They were soon joined by groups of oth er boys and together proceeded to the homes of companions who had failed to put in an appearance and by throwing stones at their windows or by pulling strings that had been fastened to their toes awoke the tardy sleepers.

SETTING OFF CRACKERS.

When the party was complete they proceeded through the deserted streets of the town firing guns and setting off bunches of snap crackers to arouse the sleepers. Several of the boys carried horns, which they blew to their hearts' content. A number of citizens who did not relish having their morning naps thus rudely disturbed stuck their heads out of their windows and said uncomplimentary things to them, but they only laughed and fired off more crackers. Their teeth chattered with excitement or cold—It is not certain which—but they did not mind it and kept up the merriment. Down on the main thoroughfare of the town the restaurants had already opened for business. From a hall above the stores the music of a band played for the dancers who had remained up all night to usher in the day. With the first peep of day the bells in every steeple began to peal out a sunrise salute, while from the hilltop back of the canal a cannon roared out.

By this time the city was awake, and the streets were soon filled with people. Excursion trains from distant points arrived every few minutes and added their human freight to the bustling crowds. Farmers from the surrounding country with their families loaded in ox carts and farm wagons, drawn up in the public square and became a part of the multitude. At 7 o'clock came the parade of "fantasticks."

At 10 o'clock the great civic and military parade marched through the streets to the music of innumerable bands. There were fire companies in red shirts and black helmet hats drawing the hand engines, or "machines," as they were called. There were companies of Masons and Odd Fellows in their regalia, platoons of policemen in uniform, squads of cavalry with sabers clanking at their sides, regiments of soldiers with the guns they had carried in the field, wagons loaded with girls in white representing all the states of the Union, floats upon which were represented scenes in the pioneer days of the republic and carriages containing the city officials and distinguished guests. Thousands of people crowded the sidewalks and buildings on either side of the route of parade and added their shouts to the noise of exploding gunpowder. When the procession reached the park literary exercises consisting of the reading of the Declaration of Independence, an oration by the local congressman, an original poem by a budding genius and the singing of "America" were held.

The afternoon was devoted to competitive trials between the fire companies, to boat races on the river, to chasing a greased pig and climbing a greased pole on the common and finally to a balloon ascension in the park. In the evening a grand display of fireworks and a band concert wound up the day's festivities. Long before night came every boy had spent all the money he had saved for a month from the sale of old bones, iron, bottles and junk and had made a requisition on the paternal pocketbook. The quantities of ice cream, lemonade and peanuts he had already consumed did not satisfy him or make him sick. Although he had burned more gunpowder probably than he had ever exploded in all his life, he was not contented. With the new money he had just bought more firecrackers and more peanuts, and when the last rocket had darted skyward and the last pinwheel had ceased to shoe he made his way homeward, the tiredest and happiest boy in town.—St. Louis Star.

THE LOCAL CONGRESSMAN.

It is not all punk that blisters.

A wet Fourth makes a lean graveyard.

The fool and his digits are soon parted.

The sticks fall alike on the just and the unjust.

A thumb on the hand is worth two in the alcohol.

It is better to take a dare than to get your hand scorched.

Remember that the giant firecracker is always ready to go off when you bend over it to see what is the matter.

Let us, then, be up and shooting, with a heart for any fate, lighting fuses and then scooting—learn to stand aside and wait.—Judge.

The Orator of Long Ago.

perature to 99 in the shade. The Fourth of July was always a hot day, in those days.

But, for all that, we are not going back on the colonel. We loved him and we love him yet. Would that we might go to the picnic this year and renew the thrill. Verily, now that of the old time Fourth of July orators were better than a cycle of Cathos or even an automobile. Perverted, tired and foolish old time patriot—farewell! Orators of this day are mere thinking machines, and the best of them are good and only successful flying machines and thus fewest so high that at last they come out in the ultimate cerulean. Farewell! So long!

A Thrilling Rescue.

How Bert B. Lean, of Cheney, Washington, was saved from a frightful death is a story to thrill the world. "A hard cold," he writes, brought on a desperate lung trouble that baffled an expert doctor here. Then I paid $10 to $15 a visit to a lung specialist in Spokane, who did not help me. Then I went to California but without benefit. At last I used Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me and now I am as well as ever." Beautiful Barrington.

Barrington and beautiful begin with the same letter, though the latter word does not apply to every part of the former. It might, if all would take as much pains as some, in keeping down weeds and removing every unsightly thing from around the premises. Dead trees should be cut down and the dead branches of live trees. Weeds should be removed from the vacant lots, and vacant property in the yards and lawns should be kept in a neat and tidy condition. Also, all refuse should be put out of sight, or removed, and nothing should appear anywhere that would seem to indicate carelessness as to our general appearance. As a matter of fact there is not much of which to complain. Our village marshal, Edward Peters, is interesting himself in this direction and the authorities should insist—each to do his part, in making our town the most attractive between Chicago and Fox River, on the Northwestern road. We think it would be a good thing and an added attraction if Barrington would plan for a park, as suggested in the Review of last week. The cost would not be great, and the advantages many.

The Summer Theatre.

For those who contemplate a visit to Chicago during the summer months and then wish to find a spot where they will be thoroughly comfortable and at the same time be highly entertained they will find it well worth while to go to the beautiful Majestic theatre, the most modern and up to date playhouse in America. Every known improvement in the way of adding to the comfort of its patrons will be found installed in this theatre, and its system of ventilation and cooling plant is pronounced by experts the most perfect of its kind. The scheme of decoration and the beautiful rose tinted draperies adorning the boxes and the ornamental floor add their bit in helping the theatre-goer to put aside all his hot weather troubles. And the splendid vaudeville bills which are presented here all the year round, are the best to be found in the marts of the amusement world. Unlike many theatres, the Majestic does not slight its summer bookings, but gives its patrons what they really deserve, and that is always the very best.

A Texas Chattel Mortgage.

A peculiar chattel mortgage was filed with the county clerk of Gonzales county recently, wherein nine turkey hens, one gobbler, and all their increase, are mentioned as collateral.—Gonzales Inquirer.
