O Say!

¶ Before you let the plumbing and heating contract in the new house you are intending to build, let me have a chance to figure with you. ¶ I have on the floor for your inspection a Peninsular furnace for hot air heat and a Richmond boiler for hot water heat. Come in and look them over.

TINSMITHING, PLUMBING, AND HEATING

All Buried at Public Expense.

There is at least one place in the world where it costs nothing to die. In some of the cantons of Switzerland all the dead, rich as well as poor, are buried at the public expense.

Our Feelin's.

Saye a feelin' writer in an article on fancy blouses: "For there are always days, when even the poorest one does not feel like a white blouse." More likely a gray goose.

Bread Winners

realize the importance of a wholesome article of food. We have a way of our own in making Bread,

Buns, Cakes and Pies

If you try them once you will have no other. Our bake shop is clean and well ventilated, and our ovens constructed on an improved plan which enables us to produce the best baking products offered to the public of Barrington. A trial order will convince you.

FURNITURE AND LOVE

"This is one of the most beautiful spots I have ever visited," said Grace, as she seated herself in her chair. "The man who conceived the idea of building a hotel here should have a monument erected to his memory."

"Rather say that he should be permitted to live here forever," suggested Smithson tactfully. "Why put him under the sod so quickly?"

"I mean when he dies, of course," amended Miss Hargreaves. She smiled brightly into the others' eyes, and, for the hundredth time that afternoon, Smithson caught himself wondering why he had not realized before what a charming girl Grace Hargreaves was.

He had known her for years but it was not until they found themselves among the first guests of the new hotel in the Rockingham region of New Brunswick that he had had the attention particularly drawn to her. The best of friends only been open two weeks, and guests were still few.

"How did you find the place?" he suddenly demanded.

"Mother wanted a new place," she explained. "Some men who hunted through here last year told her about the hotel that was being built and she insisted upon coming."

"I am here for old furniture," he volunteered. "There are all sorts of fine pieces to be picked up for a song. Their beauty lies in their genuineness, not in the imitations of imitations ago and used by the present others who used many glasses at the painted woods in the shops at Dalhousie."

Grace gave a little scream of delight. "Do you mean to say that there are really places where you can still pick up old furniture?" she asked gravely. "If I had only known! I shall have to telegraph for more money. Old furniture is a passion with me."

"Suppose we pool issues?" he suggested. "In that way we shall not bid against each other and raise the prices. I'll buy it all up and when we get back to town in the fall we will have a division."

Smithson hired a team for a month and daily the three faced forth in search of treasure trove. The others at the hotel wondered at the long drives upon which Mrs. Hargreaves and her daughter went under Smithson's guidance, but none of the furniture they picked up was brought to the hotel and the nine day wonder soon dropped.

Smithson picked up some wonderful bargains and had them all shipped to his town house. Before his vacation time was over he had skimmed the cream of the colonial collection in a ten-mile radius but even the antiquities of unpacking his treasures did not console him for the fact that Mrs. Hargreaves had elected to remain for another month.

The long delightful drives behind the fast team had developed comradeship into love as he cleaned and polished his purchases with the painstaking care of a true enthusiast, each piece was a reminder of some little happening of the vacation.

He did not fully realize this until some weeks later when at last Mrs. Hargreaves returned to town and Grace came to claim some of the spoil.

"I should like that old desk," she said, as she pointed to one of the antiquities. Smithson's face clouded.

"I was hoping that you would not want that," he said. "That is a souvenir of our first drive."

"We got a lot of things that first day," she reminded, then blushed as she remembered that moment when Smithson's hand had unconsciously dropped upon her own upon the desk. It had been only an instant but it had stamped itself indelibly upon her brain.

She could not tell him that that was why she wanted it herself, and she wondered if that was also the reason why he wished to keep it. She passed on to other things but each one had some association, and his forlorn expression as she made her choices touched her.

"I really hate to take any of these things away," she said at last. "There are no duplicates and they make such a complete whole that it would be a shame to spoil it all by breaking the collection."

"That might be avoided," he said bitterly. "If I had given less time to the collection and more to the promptings of my heart. It is the collection that makes me want to keep these things. It is because each has some association with that happy time. Look at that table and remember our lunch of bread and cheese made off its surface. It's the same way with everything else. Each piece reminds me of you and I am loath to give up even one tiny souvenir of our time."

"Is it really necessary to break the set?" she asked.

"You mean that—that you care for me?" he asked.

Grace nodded.

"No one but a stupid man would have needed to ask that question," she said softly, as she patted the desk affectionately.

"We can make a very lovely home with these and you, sweetheart," he whispered. "And to think that all this time I thought my interest was only the love of a collector!"

"I love you as a collector," she corrected softly, as she plaited in the yarn that slipped about her waist.

True Enlightenment.

"When we get sufficiently advanced we find that the way to attain harmony with God is by unfortunately conforming to him, not by seeking to conform him to us. By and by we find that there is a God of infinite perfection in power, wisdom, justice, love and holiness; and then we find that God needs no instruction, for he is all wise, and before the beginning of time and what we would happen in the history of the human race. He needs no suggestion to alter his affection, for he is all love, and has an infinite desire to confer the highest possible or conceivable blessing on the whole human race, and on each individual thereof. When we come to this conclusion we take pains to bring ourselves into harmony with God. All sacrifice disappears; all mutilation of the flesh or spirit, all ceremonies which do not grow out of the natural wants of mankind."—Theodore Parker.

Thirty Years Together.

"Thirty years of association—think of it. How the merit of a good thing stands out in that time—or the worthlessness of a bad one. So there's no guesswork in Dill Pickles. Thirty years with Kingsford's name written on them. Kingsford's Silver Gloss, No Discery for 30 years, and yet the best! Cooling and cold starch for all used. Once it finds entrance in a home you can't get it out. Mrs. Rockefeller has used it 40 years. It's the most infallible dressing and preservative on earth. Unequaled for lagrippe, asthma, hayfever, croup, whooping cough, sore lungs. Price 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Barrington Pharmacy.

Accomplished in Profanity.

This from Harper's: A native woman called on the attorney general the other day to complain of the bad language used by the child of a neighbor. "Can the prosecute for my own son? 'How old is your neighbor's child?' queried the attorney general. 'Eleven yer, replied the woman. 'I shouldn't think that a child of that age could use much bad language." Continued the attorney general. "You ought to hear him," exclaimed the woman. "Why, he can swear just as good as his father."

Accused of Stealing.

E. K. Chamberlain, of Clinton, Me., boldly accuses Bucklen's Arnica Salve of stealing—the sting from burns or scalds—the pain from sores of all kinds—the distress from boils or piles. "It robs corns, bunions, warains and injuries of their terror," he says, "as a healing remedy its equal does not exist." Only 25c at Barrington Pharmacy.
