Rebekahs Entertain Mrs. Elnora Foster

Autumn Leaf Rebekah lodge No. 626 entertained the district officers of district No. 3 at its meeting Monday night in the I. O. O. F. hall. Mrs. Effie V. Sillander of Oak Park, president of the Rebekah assembly, and David Gordon of Chicago, grand master of the Odd Fellows of Illinois, were present. The meeting was held in honor of Mrs. Elnora Foster, secretary of Autumn Leaf Rebekah, who is the district warden. Other district officers who were present were Mrs. Laura Hildebrandt of Palatine, president; Mrs. Alma Mittenthaler of Wilmette, vice, president; Mrs. Anna Haldeman of Palatine, secretary; Mrs. Viola Carlson of Blue Bluff, treasurer.

Following the regular business meeting the guests were presented with a pretty gift by Mrs. Gladys Bates. Interesting remarks were made by the state and district officers in regard to the work of the Rebekah lodge. Guests from lodges in Chicago, Crystal Lake, Highland Park, Waukegan, Carpentersville, Palatine, Wilmette, and Davsport, Ia., were present.

The social hour followed was enjoyed. In the color walk, Mr. Parr of Waukegan won the cake and Jim Powers the jar of candy. Delicious refreshments were served. Two young ladies favored those present with tap dances.

Miss Lucy Domonoy Bride of Kenneth McGowan

Miss Lucy Domonoy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Domonoy, 592 Prairie avenue, became the bride of Kenneth McGowan, son of Mrs. Rose McGowan, 200 S. Hager avenue at a lovely afternoon wedding at the home of the bride's parents Saturday. Only members of the immediate families were present.

Rev. Charles R. Brassel officiated using the single ring service.

Strains from Lohengrin on the violin played by Leona Bennett announced the approach of the bridal party and "I Love You Truly" was played softly during the service. Miss Florence Horwich attended the bride and Curtis McGowan served as best man.

The bride was in gray crepe with brown accessories and wore a shoulder corsage of white gardenias. Miss Horwich wore green crepe and a shoulder bouquet of sweet peas and roses.

A wedding dinner followed the service after which Mr. and Mrs. McGowan left by motor for Green Bay, Wis. Upon their return, they will be at home to their many friends at 200 S. Hager avenue.

Valentine Kennedy of Oklahoma City, Okla. came to be present at the wedding.

Barrington Woman's Club

The opening meeting of the Barrington Woman's club will be a one o'clock luncheon at the Barrington Hills Country club on Wednesday, Oct. 18. J. Bradley-Griffin, who will read "Richard of Bordeaux," will be presented by Mrs. Elden Gieske, club president. Since its beginning in 1927, Mr. Bradley-Griffin has directed the Uptown Players Circuit theater, which is connected with the Peoples' church of which Dr. Preston Bradley is pastor. The Little Circuit theater aims to produce plays of social and cultural value. Plays written by such playwrights as George Bernard Shaw, Arthur Goodman, Channing Pollick and John Graham have been successfully presented by the Circuit players in New York as well as in Chicago. Club members are urged to make their reservations as soon as possible as a large attendance is anticipated.

Our club received an invitation from the Edison Park Woman's club to attend their reciprocity day on October 10.

Attention is again called to the Woman's club buffet supper on October 28. As plans progress, those interested become more and more convinced that it will be a delightful party.

Impressions of District Meet

Cordial greetings, colorful flowers, earnest workers, a solemn anthem and salute, a sincere prayer, a hearty welcome, a gracious response—thus opened the fall meeting of the Illinois Seventh District Federation of Women's clubs. From Mrs. Hoffman came the slogan given at the meeting: "In federation working constructively." Announcement was made by Mrs. Philip Barry, radio chairman, that Mrs. Roy M. Hutchison, president of the seventh district, will be "on the air" over station KYW on October 30 at 5:00 p. m.

"Our duty," according to Mrs. Harry Quintance, public welfare chairman, "should be love, patience and charity toward others." Mrs. Clarence Jensen, motion pictures chairman, brought the message: "Whatever is worth doing can be done." A keener appreciation of literary arts is the aim of Mrs. O. Charles Summerfield, literature chairman. The chairman of legislation stressed working for legislation that would help people to help themselves. The tax-shops are a blight brought upon the American people because of our love for bargains, she said. The manufacturer of cheap goods is sending into bankruptcy legitimate business.

Mrs. F. E. Thornton, law observance, assured the assembly that "the prohibition question has not been settled." She urged education to learn the evils of drugs and narcotics, and a study of alcohol control in other countries. "Every woman who voted wet will not have to live long before she is sorry." Mrs. W. Earle Adams, in speaking on Indian welfare, remarked: "We should not take anything away without substituting something better."

After luncheon, Miss Kathryn Coe pleased the assembled members and guests with four vocal selections. Mrs. Florence Bradshaw, state educational chairman, was the first speaker of the afternoon. She said that club women should learn the financial condition of their public schools. We must not let the public schools bear the brunt of the economy. "If you are not willing to stand by our schools now, in times like these, your patriotism is lip-sided."

An interlude of music by Miss Coe and Mrs. L. T. York was followed by an address by Dr. Ali Kuli Khan in which he stated that "all members of humanity are one in God's eyes." It makes no difference what the name, color, or religion."

"A Trio of Fun" by Vernel Jeppsen, Kenneth Frye and Leonard Capulli furnished relaxation and laughter before the singing of "America" and the adjournment of the first district meeting ever held in Barrington.

"You need something to drink."

"No, no. I'm all right."

"I'm going to get you a bromide."

"I'll take nothing."

He set his jaw. There was a long score in the next block.

She thought: I must get away from him. She thought it so strongly that there was no room for her to wonder even about the loss of memory.

He was napping on the glass window of the cab. "You'll feel better as soon as you've swallowed something soothing."

"Please don't bother."

The driver turned a roughly shaved face toward them.

"Stop at that drug store ahead."

She shook her head. "I won't take anything."

The cab was slowing down.

"Yes you, will." His smile was wan and anxious. "I'll get them to fit something to make you feel better. It's the b—l of a jam. No wonder you fainted."

She did not ask what the jam was. She was filled with dread. But her eyes were determined. She would take nothing from him. The cab was stopped. The driver leaned toward them.

"Can't get right up in front of the place."

"This will do." The young man's hand was already on the latch. "Come on. But no, you better wait here. I'll bring it out to you." He was forcing a smile. He was suffering. She saw that. But she did not pity him. He went down the street, turned into the drug store. As she saw the list of sins through the swinging doors, she was flooded with relief. She sat paralyzed. He was gone. She leaned forward, crushing herself against the glass behind the driver, "Drive on," she said. "Drive on."

The man turned his head slowly. Looked at her stupidly.

"Drive on," she repeated "Go on."

His heavy jaw dropped. "You want me to drive on?"

"Yes, I do. Go on."

He bent to his gears. "Where to?"

"Straight ahead."

She relaxed, trembling. With a screeching of the gears, the car crashed into traffic. She watched the door of the drug store with terror. They passed it safely. He might come out at any moment. He might run after the cab, waving and shouting.

"Turn at the next corner. Turn left."

"Then turn right. Only turn. And then go on and I'll tell you when to stop."

Her fear was receding. She was weak with relief and a curious sense of triumph. The cab had turned.

"Through the park, Miss?"

"Yes."

Where was she going? Where was her home? Perhaps in a few minutes it would all come back to her. She composed herself, sat tensely in the cab, trying to be calm, trying to be rational, trying to remember. Who was her mother? Who was her father? "Look here," she whispered, "you must know somebody, even if you're an orphan. Just think of some one person that you know. Anybody at all will do. Picture somebody's face!"

This commanded, across her vision floated the picture of the taxi driver. Then the face of the man she had left in the drug store emerged clearly in her mind's eye. And that was all.

She began straining her eyes at every one in the streets. Surely, someone or something would give her a clue as to who she was, where she ought to go. She seemed to know New York, she thought with a feeling of gratitude. She could go to a hotel, she thought.

"Around the park again?" The cabman questioned.

"No. Take me to the Biltmore."

She spoke with decision. She did not know why she said the Biltmore. What she would do after she got to the hotel she could not say. It dawned on her that the young man she had left in the drug store was her single link with her past.

She drew her fox necktiece closely about her chin. Where had she got the fur? Her clothes were very tasty. She racked her brains in order to think where she had put them on. She could not remember where she had dressed that morning. "I wonder what my face is like," she thought suddenly, "perhaps I'm an old woman?"

With anxious fingers she opened her bag and found a little mirror. Her eyes, young and frightened, looked back at her. There was not a wrinkle to be seen in the soft contours of her white face. She was glad she was still young. She hadn't felt old.

She could not tell much about her face though: she spent some time inspecting it. Then she turned her attention to her hand bag. She drew out a handkerchief. It was of sheer white linen with the initial D embroidered in one corner. "D," she thought, "stands for Dorothy—or Daisy. I wonder if one of those names could be mine? Or Della? or Drusilla?"

It was bewildering to be able to think of so many names. It was exasperating. She did not believe
