Automobile May Go to Europe With No Trouble

The family automobile may now go to Europe as simply as a trunk and with as little red tape. By spending half an hour making out the necessary documents passengers can make all arrangements for touring Europe in advance of actual departure. These documents provide for customs papers, international photo and public liability insurance as well as for international driving licenses, marine insurance and a small supply of gasoline with which to begin the tour.

Highways in major countries are excellent and inexpensive in comparison with distances in the United States are short. Because there are fewer automobiles in Europe the roads are less crowded. Membership is possible in the British Automobile club and this means assistance on the road in case of a breakdown. Gas, oil, and other forms of insurance may also be arranged for and there are now two drivers in a party, a second license may be obtained for a very nominal fee.

Fruit Trees

In the Lewelling wagon train of 1852, both men and beasts might be thirsty, yet night and morning the Mrs Lewelling mixed drinks for the wayfarers. Water was a precious commodity. Now this hardy pioneer lies on the plains and up and down tortuous mountain passes. Yet, at last, they reached their journey's end near where the town of Milwaukie, Ore., now stands. Then they were carefully planted by their far-sighted owners, Henderson and Seth Lewelling. Three hundred and fifty trees were said to have survived and matured out of the original 700 seedlings. From this stock comes much of Oregon's fine fruit trees, especially her cherries.

Early Railroad Station Near Baltimore Closed

The 108-year-old Baltimore & Ohio station agency at Relay, Md., a few miles southwest of Baltimore, has closed its doors. From the day in 1830 that the first station building was erected there until now, Relay has been a landmark in American railroad history.

Standing on a high bank along the Patapsco river, during colonial times its site overlooked the fourth large river port called Elkridge landing, a fact remembered by Chesapeake bay. Indeed, until a devastating flood swept the valley in 1868, the river was still navigable from the bay to the landing, and a small log trading post-tavern grew over the route several times a week. Meantime, however, the valley began to echo to the sharp toot of locomotive whistles.

Construction of the B. & O., America's first commercial railroad, had been started in Baltimore in 1828. Within two years the rails reached out 13 miles to the famous Relay House, Peter Cooper had already run his "Tom Thumb" locomotive over the stretch, but the young railroad still put its dependence on the "bay burners"—horses, and half way of the route it had stables where to put on fresh teams, or "relays." Hence the place became known as Relay and continued to be an important point for interchange of traffic for many years.

During the Civil war period, Relay was a troop concentration camp. Now this historic and beautiful old station no longer echoes to the rumble of baggage trucks, and the click of ticket stamps. Shifting of suburban population has made it more convenient to serve the public at other nearby stations.

Peace Memorial Links Canada to United States

The spirit of friendship and peace between two nations is typified in the memorial in Vancouver's Stanley Park, which is visited by thousands yearly. Here Canada has erected a memorial preserving in perpetuity the peace message of President Harding, who was the first President of the United States to enter Canada while in office.

American, Canadians and travelers from all over the world may read the message preserved in bronze here in the beautiful setting provided by this shipping mile peninsula of British Columbia:

"No fortified fortifications mark our frontiers, no huge battleships patrol our dividing waters, no stealthy spies lurk in our tranquil border hamlets. Only a scrap of paper, recording hardly more than a simple understanding, safeguards lives and properties on the Great Lakes, and long hundred mile posts mark the inviolable boundary line for thousands of miles through forest and farm.

"Our protection is in our fraternity, our spine lurk in our faith, the ties that binds more firmly year by year in ever-increasing acquaintance and understanding, through kinship of citizens; and the compact is not of perishable parchment, but of fair and honorable dealing, which, we pray, grant, shall continue for all time."

Subway Tunnels

Because it was necessary to enlarge the tunnel on a section of the London subway system without interrupting traffic, a new tube was built around the old one. Trains functioned on schedule in the old tube during the expansion process.

'Merry-Go-Round' Windows

Window shoppers and pedestrians are going to see a good many lively shows on America's "main streets" in the not-too-distant future—and there'll be no admission charge. Merchants will soon be displaying their wares on "merry-go-round" windows, which will carry a stream of merchandise in and out of show-windows. Harold M. Alexander of London, industrial architect, told a meeting of the Illuminating Engineering society in Philadelphia. Along with this prediction, the speaker said there would be slow but sure elimination of the "garish lights and discordant signs of America's main streets" and he forecast an era in which harmonious blending of business-street architecture and luminous storefronts of structural glass will make window-shopping an artistic treat instead of a nightmare of confusing, loud color."

Harvesting the Sun

A sun-operated machine which makes household gas out of water has recently been perfected, says the Country Home magazine. The concentrates the sun's rays by means of an oil-filled glass globe, and uses them to heat one end of a welded, two-metal rod and to cool the other end. The resulting device operates like a gas refrigerator. A gentle electric current is produced which, on being passed through the generated steam, breaks it up into hydrogen and oxygen gases. The hydrogen can be used like ordinary gas for cooking, heating and lighting. Three gallons of water are said to yield enough gas for one day's household needs.

Motor Vehicle Taxes

Special taxes paid by motor vehicle users in 1938 produced virtually enough revenue to pay for all the new car and truck tags that were purchased during the year.

Automobile Payroll

There are 304,000 persons employed in automobile, automobile body and parts factories with a weekly pay roll of $8,730,000.
