Barrington Woman's Club

Members of the Barrington Woman's club are grieved from the death of Mrs. Robert Brown and extend to her family their deep and heartfelt sympathy. Mrs. Brown was a new member of the organization, having joined in September of this year, yet in that short time many of our women came to know her, and to find her an agreeable associate and an enthusiastic attendant at all club affairs. Her passing we accept as a distinct loss to our club.

The privilege to give toys or money to the Little Wanderer's Day Nursery is still yours. Send such contributions to Mrs. Elden Beske who will see that they reach Mrs. Pretzel before she visits the institution next week. Enough money has been collected thus far to provide milk for the 77 children at the nursery for one full month.

Those women who braved the zero temperature to attend the study class last Thursday were well repaid for their effort. Mrs. William Dotterer provided an enjoyable program with her short history of music and her review of "The Life of Mozart."

Christmas Greetings

ONCE more we approach that season of good will when men pause in their daily labor to renew the bonds of friendship which join them to their fellows. We take pleasure in extending to all our friends and neighbors our best wishes for a very Merry Christmas. May the genial spirit of the season brighten every hearthstone.

Marcia Davenport, who wrote the book, spent two years abroad preparing for her task. She visited almost every town Mozart did, she visited the inns and the homes where he stayed, she went to the concert halls and opera houses where he conducted his music and she had access to his original manuscripts and letters in the European museums. The result is a book by an author who understands her subject and depicts him with honesty, sincerity and sympathetic understanding. Her descriptions of some of the 19th century institutions and places are so vivid and realistic one can almost experience them with Mozart. Mrs. Dotterer read several of the best of these descriptions, one of the home into which Mozart was born; one of the taverns and inns where he stayed so often as a child; one of the opera houses and his patrons as they came dressed for a gala occasion.

Wolfgang Mozart learned to play the clavichord at three years of age; before he was five he had composed many little melodies which his father wrote down for him; and by the time he was six he and "Nannerl," his older sister, were giving public recitals in many of the large cities of Europe where older minds, grown tired of the round of foolish dissipation and ordinary social pleasures, gathered to hear the precocious child.

dren perform. At ten years, Mozart had written a symphony and by early manhood, the quality of his genius as a musician and as a composer was thoroughly known and appreciated. But, strangely, court recognition and actual success, with its accompanying freedom from financial worry never came to the young musician. He began early to dig for himself a ditch of debt from which he never emerged. Grimm, a friend of the family, wrote of him once, "He is too sincere, too active enough, too susceptible to illusions, too little aware of the means of achieving success."

There were some very happy times in Mozart's life such as his triumph in Prague where he was perhaps more fully appreciated than anywhere else; yet the periods of anxiety and heartickness seem almost to predominate. He died when only 35 years of age and was buried in such a poor and obscure place that some years later a friend, wishing to remove his remains to a proper place, was unable to find his grave. But his music lives! "The purity and loveliness of it will make its creator live forever in the hearts of human-kind."

Mrs. Dotterer urged everyone to read the book. In closing, she quoted from Dorothy Gaudin Fisher who, in recommending the book, says, "Here you will make the acquaintance of a marvelous gifted, unexcelled, lovable, impractical, uncalculating fellow, with a fresh heart for joy and sorrow. Anyone who has lived through Mozart's life in this book will not be satisfied to remain in the class of those who do not know his music."

The club takes the opportunity this column affords to wish for each of its members a happy holiday season and good fortune during the coming year.

New Ultra-Modern Buick Models Are Now at Salesroom

Heralded as "the finest Buick ever built," the 1933 line of this popular General Motors car now on display at Schauble Brothers and Collins, is a new standard for motor car beauty, comfort and value to the motorists here and throughout the country.

These 1933 cars reflect credit to the Buick engineers, who have added to the tested fundamental Buick design new qualities of modern styling, smoothness, stability, riding comfort, reliability and value. In addition to the many improvements in appearance, style and performance, these new Buicks introduce for the first time the Fisher no-draft, individually controlled, ventilation system.

The cars are longer, wider, lower and more roomy this year and these structural improvements, harmonized with the new sweeping, wind-splitting lines, which are ultra-modern but not extreme. In fact, each detail of design fully coordinates with other features. And these details have been carefully considered it appears that the engineers had read the mind of the motoring public as to what it desired in an automobile and then proceeded to make all these wishes actualities in the new Buick.

The increased size of the Buicks is apparent at first glance. More than four inches have been added to the wheelbase of the 50 Series, bringing it to 113 inches. The 60 series wheelbase has been increased from 118 to 127 inches; the 80 series wheelbase has been lengthened from 126 to 130 inches, and the 90 series from 134 to 138 inches. Added roominess and improved stability have been obtained by widening the tracks from 57 1/2 inches to 60 inches in the front and from 59 to 60 1/2 inches at the rear wheels.

This actual increase in length is further emphasized by the long, flowing lines of the new Buicks—lines that are excellent examples of the advances in artistic engineering and which combine the appearance of power, fleetness and grace.

Can Buy Light Bulbs or Pay With Light Bill

The Illinois commerce commission has given Chicago residents the option either to pay for their light bulbs when they pay their bill for electric service or to pay a smaller bill for electric service and buy their own light bulbs. The order directs the Commonwealth Edison Co. which furnishes electric service in Chicago to give notice to each customer in the first bill issued to them after December 1, that the customer has such a choice and that where the customer does not desire lamp service from the company his charges will be reduced 15 of one cent per Kilowatt hour. This reduction, the company claims is the actual expense of such lamp service.

To the Family . . . Our Christmas Greetings!

Men are in their homes to cast aside the enmities, contentions and mistakes of the past, and to join with their dear ones in celebrating the visit of Santa Claus. To them and to you all our Christmas greetings and advice is to "look forward." Plan to make each Christmas a happier one . . . if we can help you, you can rest assured of our willing co-operation.

Sass Hardware Pin Team Tallies Three Wins From Catlows

The Sass Hardware bowling team squeezed a three-game victory from the Catlows Friday night to increase their lead in the Barrington District Bowling league by three games. The team now leads by five games over Phillips 66, who won only one game of its series with Schauble Bros.

In the third game of the Sass Hardware-Catlows contest both teams garnered 821 pins, thus tying the game. The Sass group succeeded in upsetting the Catlows in an extra frame roll off and added the game to their win column.

Baptists, Salems Winners in Week's Inter-Church Loop

Charity Shot at End of Game Gives Baptist Cagers Edge Over Methodists

The Inter-Church Basketball league played two games at the high school gym Tuesday night. In the first game Salem beat St. Anne's 33 to 21, and in the second game the Baptists nosed out the Methodists 20 to 10.

Salem established a nine-point lead over St. Anne's at the half and was never in danger of losing the lead. Harder featured for Salem, dropping in eight baskets from all angles; while Green led the losers with four baskets and a free throw. Salem proved most effective under the basket, sinking most of their two pointers from under the ring.

The second game was a nip and tuck affair with the Methodists gaining a 16 to 9 advantage at the half. The Baptists kept shortening their margin during the second half and finally knocked the score at 19 all and about 30 seconds before the end of the game. There was fouling as the whistle ended the game, and the Baptists a victory in the closest game of the season.

Next Tuesday, Dec. 27, will see two more interesting games played. The Methodists and St. Anne's clash at 7:30 p. m., each seeking their first win; and one hour later Salem and St. Paul will take the floor, with the loser dropping from the undefeated class.

Hanging Up Stockings and St. Nicholas Day
The custom of hanging up a stocking on Christmas eve has an interesting history. Old manuscripts dealing with the life of our ancestors in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth centuries refer to their children on St. Nicholas' day, December 6. The gifts were smuggled into the children's rooms while they were asleep, and the saint was credited with the good deed.

children; and if those aren't all good signs of a Christian, I don't know what are!"
"You don't know anything about religion at all," retorted Miss Manning. "I'm shocked to hear you speak so. Yes, I'll be over to dinner and see him for myself. I don't want to judge, of course, but I'm prepared for the worst—Where's Paul?"

"Paul isn't well, this morning," his mother said hastily. "He's in bed, too. He's really more delicate than any of you realize—if he gets the least bit over-tired, he has a dreadful headache, just as I do. He wasn't out rather late last night. That reminds me, Mary, he called out to me just before you came in, that if you did come over, he wished you'd bring him up a pitcher of ice-water and a bowl of cracked ice. He hated to ask Mary to get it for him, because he knew she'd give him a temperance lecture. Not that he's been really drinking, of course, but naturally, young fellows like a glass of ale or so when they go out in the evening. You better go and get the ice for him now. And I'm awfully afraid you'll be late to church, Jane, if you don't hurry. I believe I'll get up after all. I'd hate to disappoint Mr. Starr if he really wants so much to meet me, and I'll make an effort to come over to dinner, Mary. I hope I shan't suffer for it afterwards."

CHAPTER IV
THE dinner which Mary stayed home from church to cook was not an entire success, either in her eyes or in the eyes of anyone else who attended it, with the possible exception of Blanche and Philip. In the first place, it was prepared somewhat hurriedly, and with a sore and grieving spirit—a combination of misfortunes which has proved disastrous to more pretentious banquets. Going into her cousin's room with the bowl of ice and pitcher of ice-water, Mary found Paul, clad in pale-blue pajamas, lying on his back in bed, his face lined and white, black rings about his closed eyes.

In spite of her wholesome freshness, Mary was by no means stupid. She knew perfectly well that "shows" in Wallace-town were apt to include other things "on the side," and she knew, too, that a drawn, mask-like pallor might be as certain an indication of dissipation as a puffy flush.

"Oh, Paul," she said reproachfully, "how can you?"
Paul sat up in bed, reaching for the ice-water. "How can I what?" he asked crossly.
"You know."
"I'm sure I don't. You're not very definite. Put some of that cracked ice in a handkerchief, will you, and wrap it around my head."

Mary complied in silence. Paul lay down again, and kept very still for some minutes, his tense expression gradually relaxing. Then he smiled, and put his arm around her.
"You're an awfully good girl, Mary," he said softly. "I don't know what I should do without you. Won't you give me a kiss? You haven't yet, this morning."

"Whom did you kiss last?" asked Mary in a hard voice.
"Why, you, right after supper last night! Don't you remember? That is—Mary's gray eyes were looking straight into his, and there was something in them which Paul found it impossible to meet. "Look here," he broke off angrily, "you're getting to be the greatest prude, do you know it? And an awfully suspicious, jealous one at that." I went to Wallace-town with Jack Weston and some of the White Water crowd—no one else from Hamstead."

"By some of the White Water crowd," I don't suppose you mean your friends and relatives there, do you? You mean some of the girls and fellows that have just come to work in the new mill?"
"Well, what if I do? There's no harm in working in a mill, is there?"
"No—in fact, I think it's rather better to work in a mill than it is to loaf on a farm. Go on."

"I won't go on," said Paul, more angrily than he had spoken before. "You're enough to drive a fellow to drink—or worse—supposing I had done anything worse. But what does it amount to—kissing a pretty girl that you've had a lark with, when you say 'good-night'—anyway! It's only what she expects. It doesn't mean anything." "It doesn't seem to—to you," replied Mary, very quietly.

"Oh, Lord! I mean, of course, it doesn't amount to anything wrong. Come back here—"

But Mary was gone, shutting the door behind her.
Outside the house, she hesitated, her lips quivering, her eyes full of tears. She couldn't—she couldn't—go home feeling the way she did, and start getting dinner. The village clock, striking eleven, decided her. Undeterred by the rain, which was still gently falling, she walked up the road toward a little mountain which was part of the farm, and called in memory of the first Blanche, who had loved to go there, "Countess Hill."

It was very quiet on the mountain. Mary, walking up one of the wide, needle-strewn paths that led to the top, the soft rain hardly penetrating the thick trees, began, almost immediately, to find peace and what she wanted still more—time and space to think resolutely about Paul. What should she do—what ought she to do? Break her engagement? How much, she asked herself, with a quick little quiver of pain, would he care if she did? Why was she always fated to make herself so unattractive to him, to be so tactless, when she was trying only to be fair and honest? And would either of them be any better off if she made what would be, to her, a heart-breaking sacrifice? In vain she admitted that neither her reason nor her instinct should allow her to love a man whom she did not respect or trust, not nearly as much as she already respected and trusted Philip Starr, who, twenty-four hours earlier had been a complete stranger to her. The fact remained that she did love Paul, with every fiber of her being, far more deeply, far more passionately, than she had ever let him see. She always had—she always would.

He had not actually even proposed to her. Their kisses had changed a little in character, had become more frequent—some way, through embraces growing less cousinly and more loverlike they had reached "an understanding." It was not clear in the minds of either of them how or when, but from that faintly determined time, Paul had become all in all to Mary, and Mary had gradually become less than she was before to Paul. She faced this fact resolutely. Paul did not love her as much as she loved him. Why—why? She almost cried it aloud. He was constantly falling her, not only by his whole idle, selfish life, but by follies such as he had committed the night before. Follies! There is little compromise of language in the speech of the average New Englander; he does not, as one writer has wittily put it, call a spade a silver trowel. The real name for such follies was sin, and Mary said it, even though she flushed in doing so. Sin! and how had she ever failed him—or anyone else—in thought or word or deed?

Mary could not help knowing that there were other men in the village who had been attracted to her, who would have been glad to make it plain that they were more than attracted, if she hadn't made it plain that no one in the world mattered to her except Paul. There was Thomas Gray, for instance, slow and plodding, but hard-working, kind and wholesome. And then—then there had been Gale Hamlin, the great architect, whose name Philip pronounced with an awe amounting almost to veneration. She had never told her family much about Hannah Adams' uncle. Her casual remarks about him had included little mention of his frequent calls at the Adams' house when she visited there, none at all of that last call, paid at the school when the news of her mother's death had come.

Building Permits for November in Suburban Towns Total $359,577

Several bright rays penetrate the prevailing gloom of the suburban building situation in the survey of permits issued for November.

In the first place while the November total of $359,577 means a 28 per cent loss in comparison with the preceding month, a natural decline of late fall, November is far from being the worst month of the year, the volume of permits for January, March, May and July each having been considerably lower. The November total is, however, approximately only one-half that of the best record of the year, namely April, which was $715,180.

In comparison with November of last year this November also shows a loss of nearly one-half. Bad as this is, analysis indicates that it really represents some improvement. While November permits of this year are only one-half of the permits issued in November 1931, suburban building for this year as a whole is only a little better than one-fifth of the amount of last year. In other words November's comparison with the same month of last year is more than twice as good as this year as a whole compared with last year.

The other bright features in the survey are the volumes of permits produced by several of the suburban communities. Gary leads with over $86,000. Niles Center is only a neck behind with $64,000 and Evanston shows the substantial sum of $45,000. It might be noted that Evanston throughout the year has consistently maintained a dependable volume of permits with perhaps less fluctuation than any other community and four or five peaks worth talking about.

A few worth while gains are shown in the November survey in comparing this month with November 1931 and with the preceding month of this year. In the 1932-1931 comparison "Wilmette" takes the spotlight with a 331 per cent increase. Gary with 537 per cent, Maywood with 120 per cent, Glenview with 65 per cent and Homewood with 47 per cent. The percentage gains over October of this year are more numerous. Crystal Lake leading with a gain of 793 per cent. The percentages in practically all cases, however, represent inconsequential amounts, Gary being the chief exception with approximately $20,000 of new building in October and over $90,000 in November.

Defends Waterway Plan Through St. Lawrence

Middle West. Chicago would be the greatest rail and waterway terminal in the world. The average ocean going ship reaching a terminal leaves $25,000 before departing, not counting the money spent by sailors. The ship pays a fee to a pilot boat, it pays a fee to the customs house, it pays a fee to the docking company, it pays stevedores for unloading and loading cargo, it frequently pays marine painters for improving the ship, it often pays a crew for scraping the hull. It pays for a new supply of food and other articles. It pays for coal. In addition to these outlets for money from the ship, the crew goes ashore and spends liberally.

The treaty between Canada and United States has not received final approval. There are powerful interests working against the waterway completion, the speaker declared. One of the interests is a combine of European shippers who want to regard American government shipping, he said. One of the arguments used in Chicago is regulation of the amount of water taken at the drainage canal. This has been grossly exaggerated, the speaker said.

State's Expense on World Fair Remains at $350,000

Cutting down estimated expenses, the world's fair commission under Gov. Louis L. Emmerson's leadership, has allocated items for various expenses to keep within the $350,000 appropriated for the state's participation in next year's exposition. Plans for more money were met by the governor's statement that the commission must stay within the appropriation.

Thanks School Children for "Old Ironsides"

Governor Louis L. Emmerson has been called upon by United States naval officials to extend their thanks to the school children of Illinois for contributions that made possible the restoration of "Old Ironsides." Pennies, nickels and dimes, contributed by children in all sections of the United States and in its foreign possessions, the naval authorities stated, perpetuated the historic craft as a symbol of the country's earliest traditions.

Village Trustees Join Group for Utilities Probe

Act on Suggestion of Cook County Board for Rate Investigation

The village trustees passed a resolution at the regular meeting Wednesday night to cooperate with the county board in requesting the governor to authorize an investigation by the state commerce commission of the utility rates in Chicago and the country towns around Chicago. This resolution was adopted on request of Cook county board special committee for utility rate reduction. A request for such a resolution was sent out to the trustees in all of the country towns around Chicago.

Homer J. Byrd, chairman of the county board committee, wrote the letter to the village board and stated in it that Chicago citizens are paying from 40 to 100 per cent more for gas and electricity than the country towns. He stated that the country towns residents are paying $3 per cent more for gas and 24 per cent more for electricity than the consumers in Chicago.

He declared that the telephone rates and zoning should be adjusted for the benefit of the users of telephones. "In order that our telephone rates will be comparable to those in other large cities, it will be necessary to have a complete readjustment not only on the basis of charge but also of the zoning system," Mr. Byrd declared.

The trustees discussed the routing of highway 59 through Barrington and considered petitions from Exmore and Hager avenue residents which requested routing of the highway over those streets. As the board had already sent a request to the district highway office for the route to be laid out west of Hager and north of Exmore, the trustees declined to make further requests of the department. They decided to forward the Hager and Exmore petitions direct to the department without comment by themselves.

During the first week, it was pointed out, the state surveyors have been in Barrington investigating several possible routes. One plan would take the road north over Hager, northeast across the railroad and in a northwesterly line to North Hough street. Another plan would carry the route north over Exmore and a third north over Exmore. No definite announcement has been made by the department.

Near Accident Brings Warning From C. & N. W.
A motor crossing accident in Barrington Friday night which might have resulted in nothing less than a demolished automobile were it not for a lucky circumstance, has prompted the signal department of the Chicago and North Western railroad to warn motorists to be more cautious when approaching crossings during the season of frosted windshields and slippery streets.

An automobile driven by Edwin Anderson, son of Arvid Anderson residing west of Barrington, skidded from the Hillside avenue crossing shortly after 10:30 p. Friday and got stuck on the center track. Anderson was driving the machine out on the Northwest highway when he turned west on Hillside. As the machine was crossing a rear wheel snapped, making it impossible for the driver to get the car off the track. The engineer on passenger train 692, going south on the east track saw the car, brought the train to a stop as soon as possible and flagged the northbound train 516 which was approaching the crossing from Palatine. The southbound train pulled up to the crossing and the crew assisted the driver in getting his machine back onto the road. A few months ago a car skidded from the same crossing.
