Demaree had been a college student for some time and had been studying languages preparatory to attending Princeton college. NINE MEN KILLED AND FORTY SERIOUSLY WOUNDED.

Bloody Riots Result From the Coke Troubles in Pennsylvania-Hard Fight at the Morewood Works.

A dispatch from Mount Pleasant, Pa., savs that a mob of about five hundred men began rioting at the Standard works. They destroyed some of the company's property and then proceeded to cut the telephone and telegraph lines of the coke company so no warning could be sent to the people at Morewood.

In the meantime the company's employes at the Standard works hurriedly repaired the telephone lines and sent word to Morewood that the strikers would attack the works in three places and had a well-laid plan to destroy the whole plant.

The deputy sheriffs were soon in readiness to receive the attack. The men were divided into two parties, Capt. Lauer having charge of the party which was placed behind the big gates of the barn of the stable inclosure.

As the rioters passed the company's store they made an attack upon it and raided it as far as they could, in a brief time breaking the windows and doing other damage.

They then marched to the barn and attempted to break down the gates. They succeeded in doing this and as they entered Capt. Lauer called out to them to halt or he would fire upon

Their answer was to fire a rattling volley in the direction of the deputies, none of whom were seriously injured. Capt. Lauer then gave the order to fire. Two volleys were fired before the mob broke and run.

The fight was brief and deadly. Two rounds of cartridges were fired by a band of sixty-five guards, and seven of the charging mob of strikers fell dead, while at least forty others were wounded-how badly cannot be definitely learned, as they were taken away by their companions.

A later report says that two of the strikers died from their wounds. A private dispatch received from Greensburg says eleven men were killed and twenty-seven wounded in the Morewood riot. The dead miners are all foreigners. Sheriff Clawson of Westmoreland county sent Gov. Pattison a telegram saying that eight men were killed in the Morewood riot and that the situation was so threatening that the militia should be called out at once.

The dead men were carried into the company's store at Morewood. The strikers demanded the bodies of the victims but were refused, and the place was immediately surrounded by an armed mob of over two thousand men. who threatened to burn everything on the premises unless the dead bodies were given up. The feeling is very bitter among the workmen, who deuncertain terms.

Secretary of Agriculture. Rusk. when questioned aout the cabled statement of the removal of the embargo on pork by Germany said he had, had no official notification. He added: "The removal of this embargo on American pork products in Germany. was one of the first things which I determined to accomplish, if possible, on assuming my present office, The result of the negotiations showed me that to obtain adequate concessions from the German government it would be necessary for us to provide for a microscopical examination of all pork destined for their trade. My belief is that though we have not yet received any official notification of the removal of the embargo on American pork, we can look for some such course on the part of the German government ere long."

The excitement over the Italian affair has subsided, and it is not a topic of sufficient live interest to engage attention in fashionable drawingrooms. Secretary Blaine is not yet prepared to make public anything throwing additional light on the situation, and unless there should be, contrary to all expectations, another bombshell as sudden and startling as the recall of Baron Fava, it is probable that the Italian entanglement will not again be a subject of all-engrossing public interest, and that it will take the usual tedious course of diplomacy.

There is some desire manifested to know the nature of the reply Secretary Blaine will make to the message of the Marquis du Rudini, but the Secretary evidently prefers less haste in the diplomatic affair, for he sent down word that there was nothing new in the situation and that his reply to Marquis du Rudini was not ready for publication.

The following information is furnished by the bureau of American reublics:

Guayapa river. In addition to these works Messrs. Perry and Imboden agree to erect one hundred miles of telegraph line, establishing communication by wire between the Mosquito region and the interior of the country. Active measures will at once be taken to induce immigrants to settle upon the lands of the concession, and liberal inducements are offered.

The government of Honduras has issued a decree continuing for another tern of years the steamship company maintained by Messrs. De Leon and Alger, between Puerto Cortez, Belize and New Orleans.

The Custom Rapidly Dying Out in the Vessels of the Last Years of the Nineteenth Century Our Navy Fifty Years Ago.

The placing of figure-heads under the bowsprits of ships appears to be a custom alike ancient and honorable. Ovid tells us that the vesse! in which he was carried to his place of exile bore a bust of Minerva under the bow. The ship that rescued St. Paul from the island of Melita bore a double image of Castor and Pollux. The Carthagenian merchant ships had their crocodile, the Punic cruisers their figure of Baal, the Norsemen and Danes their dragons and serpents. The famous English ship Terrible carried a ghastly skeleton at its prow, and the French privateer Surcouf. the terror of the Indian seas in the Napoleonic war, adorned the bows of his famous crusier, the Revenant, with the figure of a corpse in the act of casting off its shroud. When the sloop-of-war Pearl, commanded by Lieutenant Maynard, of the navy of

George II., sailed into Port Royal after its victory over the redoubtable pirate Blackbeard, it carried under its bowsprit a realistic figure-head representing the head of the famous buccaneer himself as it was struck off his body by Maynard's sword.

The custom of decorating the bows with something emblematic of the ship's name or purpose is one that is rapidly dying out in the vessels of the last years of the nineteenth century. Particularly is this true in the ships of bow prevents the use of anything more than a simple scroll, or, as in the case of the Yorktown. a plain, unadorned shield. Our navy fifty years ago, however, then famous among the navies of the world, possessed an array of figure-heads the like of which had never been, seen in warships before or since. A very interesting collection of these figure-heads is now to be seen at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

At the close of each month, when the cadets march from their quarters to the dreaded examination rooms, there to undergo tests for better or worse, their route passes under the shadow of a massive Indian warrior in wood, the figure-head of the old line-of battle ship Delaware. It is mounted near the old mess-hall, on a pedestal eight feet high, and the head towers fully fifteen feet above the ground. For many years this chieftain has been worshiped by the midshipmen as the patron saint of satisfactory averages, the attainment of which depends, according to an unbroken chain of academy legend, upon the favor or disfavor of his mute. though royal, wooden Indianship. So, when the days for the examination come around, with a conspicuous disregard of the second commandment, each middy, as he marches to his trails, doffs his cap to the god, and thereafter his mind rests easy in the assurance that he has faithfully invoked the blessing of the idol of his professional ances-

For years and years the big white Indian has gazed intently across the parade ground, receiving the obeisant salutations of its subjects with only a stony stare. Its massive head, with its scalp-lock, is thrown well aloft, and crowned by four long feathers. There is a quiver filled with arrows at its back, and round its waist there is a belt, carrying a scalping knife, tomahawk, and pipe. Altogether the big chief is a most imposing personage.

Although Marryat's gunner is made to tell Peter Simple that he 'never knew a vessel with a fiddle-head to do anything," and although the figurehead is gradually disappearing from the later-day navies, there would seem to be something very appropriate in picuous in the eyes of the worl!. Another figure head at the Naval Academy, and one about which clusters a more lustrous history, is that of the old Constitution. This is a life size figure of President Jackson, firm and erect, his left hand thrust in his coat, while in his right he carries a scroll presumably the Constitution. This figure-head was carved at Boston in 1834, and placed on the vessel's bow in the second term of Jackson's administration, just after the ship returned from her famous cruise of sixteen months, and fifty-two thousand three hundred and seventy-nine miles. There seems to have been just as many offensive partisans then as now, for instantly the enemies of the administration began to clamor for the removal of the President's figure from the bows of the ship made glorious by the captures of the Guerriere, the Fava, the Pictou, the Cyane, and the Levant.

No attention was paid to these demands, and one fine morning, two months later, the officers in command were horrified to find the President's figure decapitated. Whereupou the Boston Courier of July 4, 1834, said:

"It appears that during the night of Wednesday, the head of this wooden image was sawed off by some person or persons unknown. It is a rather myserious affair. The Constitution liesat the navy yard, between two seventyfours, and it is understood that a guard, or watch, is continually kept on board. It seems impossible that the deed could have been executed without discovery. notwithstanding that the night was dark and rainy. The head which had been sawed from its trunk, it is said, was at least twenty feet above the surface of the water. It is the opinion of several intelligent men, who examined the premises yesterday, that the perpetrators must have gone to their work through the navy yard.

"It was reported last evening that Commodore Elliott had offered one thousand dollars for the person or persons who committed the deed.'

The President's headless trunk adorned the Constitution's bows for a year longer, when the frigate was brought to New York. Here, on Saturday afternoon, March 14, the head carved by Messrs. Dodge & Sons was replaced on the trunk representing President Jackson on the bow of the frigate Constitution. The whole affair had been managed with great care and secrecy. The man who cut off the President's head was exposed three years later in a most unexpected manner. In one of the New York City courts there was an action of assault and battery in which Samuel W. Dewey was plaintiff and Joseph Fay and Edward H. Dixon defendants. In the course of the evidence, one of the witnesses stated that Dewey, who, it seems, was a captain, informed him on the evening of the assault that he (Dewey) cut off the figure-head of the frigate Constitution. of the Franklin, eighty-six guns, a shir whose cruise in the Mediterreanean in 1817, as the flag-ship of Commodore Charles Stewart, made her famous in the eyes of the European ship-builders. They pronounced her the finest model n the world, and her lines were embodied in all the European types of marine architecture for the next quarter of a century. The figure-head which now survives this gallant manof-war is a large bust of Franklin bare headed, with long, flowing hair. A splendid bust of Minerva, six feet nigh, forms another interesting figure of a collection of figure-heads at the Naval Academy, and commemorates as well an epoch in naval history made glorious by the triumphs of the frigate United States under the gallant Decatur. This figure-head adorned the prow of the old Macedonian when she was captured from the French by, the English. The bust was very much worn and defaced when taken from the Macedonian at the time of her capture by the United States in 1812, and for this reason it is presumed that the relic is more than a hundred years old. When the ill-fated Macedonian was taken to England by her first captors, the figure of the British lion was carved by sailor to take the honored place at the bow then occupied by the classic Minerva. The lion was completed, but before it could be put into place hostilities between England and America called the ship into action. When the Macedonian struck her colors to the guns of the United States, Decatur and his men found the parved ! on in the captain's cabin, and i is now an interesting feature of the Naval acidemy

THE QUEER INFANTILE GAMES THEY PLAY.

The Most Beautiful Things in the Flowery Kingdom Are the Children -- Always Ideally Dressed-"A Nation at Play."

The most delightful things in Japan are the children, writes Douglas Sladen. Taken as a whole, I don't think one finds such delightful children anywhere else in the world. For to the beauty and the grace of childhood they add the roguishness, the playfulness and the gentleness of puppies or kittens. They are just as self-possessed.

They are always ideally dressed and have a considerable amount of actual beauty, as well as quaintness, in their little faces, as round and soft as a ripe plum. To begin with, they have marvelous complexions, clear brown skins, as velvety as peaches, with a rich, damask red on the cheeks. And they have the loveliest little rosebuds of mouths and the whitest teeth, generally very regular, though small. They have also beautiful little hands and feet with a clear brown skin, slender, well-formed, "nervous" fingers and toes and remarkably good nails. Outside these points they are beautifully ugly, or qaint. Their queer little hickory-nuts of heads are shaved, all except one little tuft of jet black hair at the top of the head or over each

And their eyes are like black beads, with hard china whites twinkling behind narrow slits. They have the funniest little snubs of noses andplu mp and puppyish figures.

The Japanese love to dress their children in strictly Japanese style, in the most becoming clothes, just as they exhaust their ingenuity in inventing games and toys for them.
It is fortunate that nearly all the steeds in Japan are human. Otherwise we never would have got to our destination in safety, that New Year's day, when we took the long drive from our temporary abode in the castle of Tokio to the fair which was taking place in the grounds of the great temple of Kwannon at Asakusa, for the streets were at the mercy of throngs of little girls in their gayest dresses and sashes, with powdered faces and carmined lips (coloring said to be in imitation of a certain kind of gay beetle), and with a most gorgeous coiffure, playing at hane-tuski (battledore and shuttlecock) in pairs of circles. Their shuttlecocks tiny feathered balls made of seeds and their battle-dore made of the light kiri wood (Palownia Imperialis), of which clogs are made, had backs in all the rainbow, raised up with cloth, padded silk, etc., to give some popular actor, hero of romance or singing girl in the most Japanese style of beauty.

One had to pass through a hail of shuttlecocks, some of them whizzing past you pointblank, like a hard volley at lawn tennis, others dropping just in front of your nose on a battledore, which shied it back again. No horses would have stood it.

The boys were having top-fights koma asobe). If it had been windy enough for their favorite kites it wouldn't have been calm enough for battledore. These tops were made of them, and were wound up and thrown. The first thrower threw his to spin; the second threw his to strike the spinning

Japan is veritably, as Sir Rutherford Alcock called it, "the paradise of babies." If a village is large enough to hold a shop at all it has a toy-shop. The poorest parts of the cities have numbers of them. Fairs have hardly anything else except pipe cases and combs, and parents are forever devising or buying toys for their children. At any of the matsuri (festivals), at great temples like those of Shiba and Asakusa, one will see the poorest Japanese going off laden with toys for their children. The toys, it is true, are cheap and simple. Some of the favorite ones are made of dough, blown in much the same way as glass is, into figures of Gods and men and jinri kischas and cocks and foxes and fir trees, and rudely colored.

The favorite pastime of the Japanese give a girl the habit. One constantly sees boys who look hardly old enough to go to school actually engaged in busine-s-bookbinding or painting lanterns and umbrellas, or even with tiny hammers knocking the gold-leaf into the fretted surface of the great "Satsuma" jars which Tokio and Yokohama turn out in such abundance.

The boys are charming until they put on red socks and pseudo-European shoes and flat-brimmed caps and spectacles and attend one of the great schools on foreign models. Those are the grubs which change into soshi.

The acrobatic shows are rather distress. ing, such very young children perform the contertions. In Yokohama, especially, there are troops of child acrobats, adorned with cocks' feathers and scarlet flannel, who go about the streets throwing somersaults for visitors.

Good-by, little Japs, who are said never to break anything (perhaps because there is nothing in your bones to break), who never hear a cross-word from your parents and enjoy your mother's milk until you are nearly old enough to carry the next baby, who look the cleanest and sweetest little things imaginable on the occasions when your heads are not running with eczema or your noses with colds, (your parents never attempting to stopeither). Day fireworks are mere smoke to the gleams of color which dart about the treets in your clothes, and butterflies are less glowing and less substantial.

Never grow up! And may Jajan never grow up out of its old delightful tatus of a "nation at play."

A DUCHESS IN REGIMENTALS. costumes of Queen Victoria and the Royal Household.

The fun of some of the members of the English royal family seems to be had in getting themselves up in costumes foreign to their everyday existence. A very popular photograph of the Princess of Wales is one in which she appears in the cap and gown of a university man. Prince Henry of Battenberg, whether it is fun for him or not, appears upon occasions in Highland garb, and the Queen herself is said to have had a uniform made last spring in the style of an officer of the German army out of deference to her royal grandson who offered her the distinction of a soldier's title. It was reported that she was to wear the coat on parade, but the fat lady is hardly likely to have had any intention of the sort.

The Duchess of Connaught, however, the Queen's third daughter-in-law, has worn the "regimentals," and very well she looks as the chief of the Eighth

THE CZAR'S SON.

His Journey Around the World to Be Completed by a Visit to America.

The czarowitz will soon arrive in San Francisco to continue the tour of the world, which he began some time ago. He has spent some time in British India since he left home, and was given a grand reception by English officials and native chiefs in all the principal cities. Some queer stories are told of his actions to illustrate the chronic fear of nihilism, in which the whole Russian imperial family live. The future Emperor of all Russia is said to be very nervous and to live in constant expectation of assassination. At a banquet given to him and his suite in Madras a characteristic incident occurred. The czarowitz and his fellow travelers were, as usual, in full military uniform and wore their swords. A loud explosion was hear, outside the banquet hall and the imperial ghost and his suit turned pale, jumped to their feet and put their hands to their swords. They evidently thought it was a bomb which had exploded. Investigation showed that it was only a soda water bottle that had burst.

It is generally supposed that more Nihilists and Anarchists have found refuge in America than in any other country, and it is said that most elaborate precautions have been taken to guard against attempts on the young man's life during his sojourn in the United States. THE deaths in Chicago for March, the present year, were 3290, an average of over 800 a week.

THE Jefferson Town and 27th Ward elections is a victory of which the Republicans should well feel proud, and with Ald. Conway in the Council for two years more, we can rest assured the interests of the 27th Ward will not suffer.

THE Chicago city health department has received a cablegram from Dr. Mortimore Granville, of London, England, giving the following receipt for la grippe: "Five grains of camphor in twenty minims tincture of his plurality. iodine in a drachm each of glycerine and syrup. Give frequently for influenza strong meat juice, and use no antipyrine." Dr. Wickersham, health commissioner of Chicago, does not recommend the above receipt, but many lovely flowers and other presents. savs that what those afflicted with influenza or la grippe need is sunlight, exercise and good food.

The presentation of the drama "Better than Gold," by the Home Dramatic Club at the Turner Hall, drew a large audience. The various roles were extremely well filled by the following members of the club- Misses Emma Bodman, Gertrude A. Macey, Ella Evans, Hattie Mertschty, and Messrs. John Peck, Charles Taylor, James Simpson, William Simpson and Willie Evans. The performance demonstrated the fact that the members of the Home Dramatic Club have dramatic talent of a high order. The play will be presented at Turner Park at an early date.

The re-election of Ald. Conway by a majority of nearly 200 was a fitting rebuke to those democrats who persisted in carrying on such a disgraceful and libelous mud slinging campaign. The success of Matt Conway is the more satisfactory, inasmuch as he he came in ahead of his opponents by such a large majority in spite of the fact that the latter was running on the Cregier, Harrison and Citizen's tickets.

WASHBURNE

THE "GANG" RESORTS TO FRAUD

The Official Count will show Hempstead Washburne Elected by a good Plurality.

The result of the election Tuesday is most gratifying to all lovers of good government. With Hempstead Washburne in the mayor's chair the 'gang' rule, which has domineered the city hall for the past two years, will be a thing of the past.

It is the evident intention of the Cregierites to place their man in power, regardless of the means employed. But the election law of the State will prove an effectual bar to any attempt at fraud. The anti-"gang" leaders have felt great uneasiness over the delay in the returns of certain ballot-boxes and poll-sheets from districts known to be democrats. fear has been that the results of the election in these precincts would be withheld until the exact plurality of Washburne was ascertained, and that the sheets would then be coctored sufficiently to give "hizzorer" the required lead. Whatever the designs in holding back the returns from these precincts may have been, it is certain that the work was overdone and that the election commissioners, if they faithfully discharge their duties, will be compelled to throw out the very precincts from which Cregier expects

One of the most serious objections which the suburbanite finds in frame dwellings is the liability of his roof leaking in a short time after the per. shingles are placed on it. CHAPTER X: IX. -- CONTINUED.

The poor Caribs perished to a man. They were the last to start, and came up only as the Cariberoes, whose numbers increased every moment, were making one final and frantic attempt to drive us through the gap into the sea. We did our best to rescue them; but owing to the nature of the ground we could sally out only a few at a time, and so failed utterly. Though the Caribs in their extremity fought with frantic desperation, they fell like corn before the reaper, and the fight went on until the fighters, looking more like demons than men, were well-nigh inclosed in a ring of fire. Then, throwing down their weapons, they broke and fledsome making for the wood, others for the cliff.

"They cannot escape, do as they will!" said Oliver Fane, half exultingly, half pitifully. "If they go down the cliffs, they will break their necks; and before they can get through the wood it will be all in a blaze. The Cariberoes will trouble us no more, Mr. Etle." "If we could only have saved those poor Caribs-"

Just then the fire swept up both sides of the gap, filling it with smoke and sparks, and overcome with the heat and foul air (for we were packed like herrings in a barrel), the pain of my wounds, and loss of blood, I went off in a dead faint.

CHAPTER XXX. -AFTER THE FIGHT. It is nearly a month since the battle of Wynter's Hill, and I am lying with my head bandaged and one of my arms in a sling, in Queen Mab's own room. Though convalescent, I am still very weak, my hurts having been much more serious than in the excitement of the combat I had any dea of. The wounded had been removed to Fuirhaven by sea, and as there was no public hospital in the place they were taken to private houses, myself and several others to the queen's house.

As I lie, with my eyes half closed, listening to the caroling of birds and drinking in the sweet scent of flowers (for the day is young), I go over in my mind all that has happened to me since I left England, and I ask myself-"What next?" I am as resolved as ever to go ba. :- it is my duty to go back-I must go back. And yet, and yet-though I struggle against the feeling, and try to ignore it, I know that in my heart of hearts I do not want to go back. Why? I had all along admired Mab, and now- I should be sorry to leave her. Lately I had seen her in a new character that of a sick-nurse-and she had shown herself to be as tender and compassionate as she had before shown herself to be brave and high-spirited. Not a day passed that she did not visit every one of the wounded, both in her own house and elsewhere; and despite her foibles and superstitions, how splendilly had she behaved throughout! She interested me immensely, and I admired her-nothing more-of course, nothing more. For had I not renounced love any probable harm. Don't you think so?" and all its work? And even though I had not, the very i lea of love would, in the circumstances, be impossible and ab- in England, I suppose?" surd, if only because of the difference in our positions. As I arrive at this stage of my reflections, the subject of them enters the room. She is in deep mourning, for, like everybody says; but she is a wise woman, and nobody else at Fairhaven, she has to lament the loss of kinsmen and friends. Of the fifless than a thousand returned to their homes. Among the slain is Amyas. He deemed the promise he had made to his better.

"I am glad you are so much better today, and that the doctor allows you to talk wlittle," said Mab. She was more subdued in manner than I had ever seen her, and the pallor of her face and the dark lines about her eyes showed how much she had suffered and how deeply she sympathized with the sorrows of her people.

"Yes, I am very much better, and I think I shall soon be all right again; but the scenes I witnessed at Wynter's Hill will never be effaced from my memory. I dream of them every night. It was like pandemonium. Have you heard whether any of the Cariberoes escaped?"

"So far as we can ascertain, not one. None have been seen, and we have taken possession of all their canoes. But it is time we talked about yourself. The victory was dearly bought, yet it was worth the price; it has saved the commonwealth, and I don't think the Cariberoes will ever invade us again-at any rate, not in our time. Well, this victory we owe to you-"

"No, no! If you had only seen how pluckily those young fellows fourth, how splendidly they captured the gap, you would know better. I really did very lit-

"I give our young soldiers all the credit they deserve; yet I am sure that but for the way in which you organized and led them we should not have won the victory. They all say so; I say so, too, and I forbid you to contradict me. You have behaved splendidly, and I want to know what recompense we can offer you."

"Recompense?" "Yes; what shall be done to the man whom the queen delights to honor?"- smiling. "Let him go home."

The smile vanished, and was replaced by an angry frown. "Let him go home! You want to leave us, then?"

"Don't put it in that way, please. I shall be very, very sorry to leave you; but I have friends in England, and an old mother, who is a widow. I am her only son, and if she thinks I am dead, it may bring her gray hair with sorrow to the grave. It is my duty to go home-if I can." "And among these friends there is one. perhaps dearer even than your mother?" "Not at all. There is nobody else I care" very much about, or who cares much about me. I dare say all the others have pretty nearly forgotten me already." "How would you go," "If you would point out the position of the island on the map, and lend me the Sunflower,' and a few men, I think Bolsover and I could navigate her to some port where we should find vessels possibly a steamer bound for England." "And you would never come back?" "That depends. I should be very sorry-I mean I should hope to come back-some-

"Sometime?" "I mean that I am a poor man, and have my way to make in the world, and I might not be able to come back so soon as I could

Mab seemed much agitated. She rose from ber chair, walked excitedly up and down the room, then returned and sat near me, at the head of the sofa. "I have a confession to make and a question to ask," she said, in a low, tremulous voice. "I know it is not usual in England, but here, in Fair Island- I thought-I mean that I did not intend-but now that you want to go home—and it is right you should—I must. Has it never occurred to you—have you not seen" (impetuously) "that-that I love you-love you with all my heart, and that I should be glad-oh, so glad!-to be your wife? Say, now, have you never thought of this?"

This avowal took me so completely by surprise that I knew not what to saycould hardly think, in fact-for in my wildest dreams it had never occurred to me that it would ever enter into Mab's mind to make me a formal offer of her hand and heart.

"You do not answer-you are angry with me!" she exclaimed, in a broken voice. You think I am unmaidenly. You do not love me. Well, be it so"-averting her face; that face which had never seemed to me so beautiful.

"No, no, no!" I said, taking her hand and pressing it to my lips. "Not until this moment did I know how dear you are to me; and if I had known I should not have dared to speak. You are a grand woman, a true queen, my queen, and I love you as you say you love me -with all my heart." "As I say I love you! Oh, how little you know !-- ' I drew her toward me and put my arm round her neck. "Do not think that I shall ask you to forego your visit to your mother. I will go with you to England." "You will go with me to England!"

"Do you think I would let you go alone? few months. And I want to see England. We are very backward. We must have more books, and a printing press and machinery, and other things. And when we come back you shall take part with me in the government. We will abolish slavery -I have been reading 'Uncle Tom's Cab-

"I am delighted to hear you say so. But what will the slave-owners say?"

"If for every slave I give them a horse they will say nothing; they will be quite content. And I shall buy horses." "That will be a very costly operation.

You will want a great deal of money." "I have a great deal. First of all, there is the treasure, which is worth I don't know how much, and I have pearls enough for a king's ransom."

"Pearls, Mab! Where on earth did you get them?"

"They came out of the sea. There is a very valuable pearl fishery on the south side of the island. But it has not been fished for a long time, partly because we had as many pearls as we wanted, partly because my father feared they might create a craving for riches and luxury, and possibly bring other evils in their train. But if we can exchange them for something useful, and they enable us to abolish slavery, the good will more than outweigh "Certainly."

"Of course you can. To any extent you

"Then we will take a lot with us; buy, might be, I must go, and the sooner the think I would rather not touch the treasure: for Sybil says that so long as it remains on the island the commonwealth will endure. I don't quite believe all she ever neglects her warnings with impunity." "The pearls will do quite as well, though teen hundred who went out to the fight, it does seem a pity to let all that money lie idle. Properly invested, it would produce a large income. However, you are perhaps was one of the last to fall, and nobly re-right. You have everything you need, and enough is as good as a feast. But what will Field and the others say to your idea of making a trip to England? It was only the other day that the mere suggestion horrified them beyond measure." "Well, if it came to a contest of wills. I think mine would prevail. And you don't know what a change recent events have wrought in their ideas. You are the most popular man in the island. They think you were sent purposely to save the commonwealth; and the fact of your having survived so many dangers is regarded as a proof of the Divine favor-for our people, though, as you may think, rather superstitious, are essentially religious. They have often urged me to marry, and our marriage and your undertaking to become one of us would reconcile them to anything. And we can concede so far to their prejudices and the injunctions of my ancestor of sacred memory as to bring no strangers back with us and keep secret the whereabouts of the island."

A few weeks later we were quietly married by the queen's chaplain, a lineal descendant of the chaplain of his Britannic Majesty's ship "Hecate," and the next day we left Fairhaven on our way to England. Having ascertained the exact position of the island, we had no difficulty in shaping the "Sunflower's" course for a not very distant port, where, as I knew, we could obtain a passage to London or Southampton. Old Tom went with us, but merely as sailing-master; he liked the island so well that he had determined to settle there for life. Our crew consisted of half a dozen fishermen, whose faces were so bronzed by exposure to sun and wind that the peculiarity of their complexions was not likely to be remarked, especially as the port whither we were bound possessed a mixed and many-colored population. The "Sunflower" was to take back a cargo of horses; and I arranged with Bolsover to meet us on our return from England, the date of which we fixed approximately beforehand.

As I anticipated, we had not long to wait for a homeward-bound steamer. Our voyage to the Thames was unmarked by any incident of importance. A high-fitting dress, and a foulard carefully adjusted and continually worn, prevented the pecu!iar color of Mab's neck from being much noticed. But her tall stature, splendid proportions, and powerful face, and, I am bound to add, her somewhat imperious manner, could not escape observation; and owing to the acuteness of her senses she often overheard remarks, complimentary and the reverse, which gave her more annovance than amusement. For this reason, and for others which will suggest themselves to the reader, I decided to leave her in London while I went to Liverpool to see my mother and inform her of what had happened to me. But on my arrival thither I found, to my great grief, that she had died a few weeks previously. that her death was in no way connected was divided up among the employes. last moment of her life she had cherished the hope of seeing me again.

After settling her affairs and calling on poor Mrs. Peyton, I rejoined my wife, and we left London immediately. Although the great city interested her much, she found life there intolerable, and was beginning to suffer seriously in health. The never-ceasing din distressed her beyond measure; she could hear voices through an ordinary wall as distinctly as I could hear them through a paper partition; hear a cough in the attic, a ticking watch in the basement. In the hotels at which we stayed I had to engage the rooms both above and below ours, and on either side of them, in order that they might be unoccupied. But I could neither suppress the noises outside, nor purify the air inside: and the queen's sense of smell being as acute as her other senses, she suffered even more from the evil odors of London than its incessant racket. So for the short remainder of our stay in England I took a furnished villa near Penmaenmawr, where the only sounds which Mab was compelled to hear were the murmur of the waves. the soughing of the wind, and the singing of birds, and where the air, though less balmy, was as pure as that of Fair Island itself.

Before leaving London I sold some fifty thousand pounds' worth of pearls, and purchased such things as Mab thought her people most required.

To the managing owners of the "Diana." I remitted a bank draft for the declared value of her cargo, with no other explanation than that, although the ship herself had become a total wreck, I had been so fortunate as to dispose of the cargo for an amount that, I was glad to think, would recoup the underwriters the greater part of the claims for which they were liable.

To one friend only-an old school-fellow whom I accidentally met in London-did I introduce my wife and tell my story. To Now that we are no longer in fear of a this gentleman, moreover, my book, if I Carib invasion, I can easily be spared for a may call it mine, will owe its existence. Himself a pressman and a writer of stories, he was good enough to say that my personal narrative, "put into proper shape." might make a readable book; and he offered, if I would give him the necessary particulars, to act as its literary sponsor, and see the work through the press. Mab and I, after some hesitation, agreed to this proposal, making it, however, an imperative condition that the precise whereabouts of the island should on no account be disclosed-for the present.

> The first and greater part of my narrhtive was then taken down in short-hand; the remainder I have written on the voyage out; and as I add these lines, Bolsover is waiting with the "Sunflower" to convey us and a second consignment of horses to Fair Island. In the not distant future I hope that Mab and I may have so far overcome her people's prejudice against strangers, and their love of isolation, that we shall be permitted to say where we are and in some fu-ture edition of "A Queer Rice" invite those of my readers who may feel so disposed to pay us a visit in our island home.

> THE END. English Homes.

"One thing that impresses the stranger coming to this country are the houses without fences around them," remarked an Euglishman recently in the lobby of the Hotel Cadil-"In England, you know, when we build our houses we put walls around them and build the walls so high that no one can look over and see us. Not that we are ashamed to be seen-oh, dear, no-but because every man's house is his castle you know. I suppose the Americans build their houses having in mind the maxim of the old Roman: 'I will build my house so that all the world may see my every action.' As I walked down a residence street the other day, through one window I saw the family cating breakfast, and through the window of another house the 'domestie' making beds. On the lawn of a third house were playing a score of the neighbors' children. An Englishman is like a bear if any one steps on his lawn. You know the story told of Tennyson? Several ladies anxious to see him paid a pilgrimage to his country seat. Tennyson was seated on the front steps smoking an old pipe when they ap-watched them crossing his lawn and his brow lowered. "Is this Lord Tennysen? Well, we're so sorry to intrude. We wish to apologize for entering in this unceremonious fashionpeared in the distance. The old poet

"Then, why don't you go?" said Tennyson curtly, surrounding himself with a cloud of tobacco-smoke. And this is the attitude most Englishmen maintain in their homes." - Detroit

Tribunc. Senator Ingalls' Talented Daughter.

Miss Ethel Ingalls is the oldest of Senator Ingalls' four daughters, each one possessing an unsual share of beauty. Miss Ingalls has just turned twenty. She has her mother's beauty and much of her father's cleverness. Two seasons in society and a great deal of flattering have not spoiled her. On the contrary, though but twenty, her mind is much older, and she regards young men of twenty-five as much too young to be companionable. She adores her father, and finds him and his friends more congenial than the society of young men. cares nothing for the gay whirl and is quite indifferent to fine toilets. She is a reader and interesting talker. Her tastes are literary and she has already given proof of her ability to write well and gracefully. It is hardly fair to say that Miss Ingalls lacks application, when there is so little incentive, or even opportunity, for a young woman in official circle to do aught but meet social duties. Necessity of action, having behind it some high aim, would bring out Miss Ingalls' powers, and she would undoubtedly make a name in the literary world. She is a darkeyed beauty, of the brilliant type, tall slender and graceful. In conversation she is magnetic and sparkling.

PLAGUE OF INFIDELITY.

DR. TALMAGE SAYS IT IS THE MOTHER OF PLAGUES.

Infidelity a Negative Religion.—It Can Offer the Christian Nothing in Exchange for His Faith.

NEW YORK, April 5, 1891.—Continuing his course of sermons on "The Ten Plagues of the Cities," Rev. Dr. Talmage today took for his subject "The Plague of Infidelity." The discourse was delivered to large and appreciative audiences at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in the forenoon and the New York Academy of Music in the evening. The text was, Romans 3, 4: "Let God be true, but every man a liar."

That is if God says one thing and the whole human race says the opposite, Paul would accept the Divine veracity. there are many in our time who have dared arraign the Almighty for falsehood. fidelity is not only a plague, but it is the mother of plagues. It seems from what we hear on all sides, that the Christian religion is a huge blunder; that the Mosaic account of the creation is an absurdity large enough to throw all nations into rollicking guffaw; that Adam and Eve never existed; that the ancient flood and Noah's ark were impossibilities; that there never was a miracle; that the Bible is the friend of cruelty, of murder, of polygamy, of all forms of base crime; that the Christian religion is woman's tyrant and man's stultification; that the Bible from lid to lid is a fable, a cruelty, a humbug, a sham, a lie; that the martyrs who died for its truth were miserable dupes; that the Church of Jesus Christ is properly gazetted as a fool; that when Thomas Carlyle, the sceptic, said, "The Bible is a noble book," he was dropping into imbecility; that when Theodore Parker declared in Music Hall, Boston, "Never a boy or girl in all Christendom but was profited by that great book," he was becoming very weak minded; that it is something to bring a blush to the cheek of every patriot, that John Adams, the father of American independence, declared, "The Bible is the best book in all the world;" and that lion-hearted Andrew Jackson turned into a ling coward when he said,

"That book, sir, is the rock on which our Republic rests;" and that Daniel Webster abdicated the throne of his intellectual power and resigned his logic, and from being the great expounder of the Constitution and the great lawyer of his age, turned into an idiot, when he said, "My heart assures and reassures me that the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. From the time that at my mother's feet, or on my father's knee, I first learned to lisp yerses from the sacred writings, they have been my daily study and vigilant contemplation, and if there is anything in my style or thought to be commended, the credit is due to my kind parents in instilling into my mind an early love of the scriptures;" and that William H. Seward, the diplomatist of the century, only showed his puerility when he declared. "The whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever-growing influences of the Bible;" and that it is wisest for us to take that book from the throne in the affections of uncounted multitudes, and put it under our feet to be trampled upon by hatred and hissing contempt; and that your old father was hoodwinked, and cajoled, and cheated, and befooled when he leaned on this as a staff after his steps shortened as he came up to the verge of the grave; and that your mother sat with a pack of lies on her lap while reading of the better country, and of the ending of all her aches and pains, and reunion not only with those of you who stood around her, but with the children she had buried with infinite heartache, so that she could read no more until she took off her spectacles, and wiped from them the heavy mist of many tears. Alas! that for forty and fifty years they should have walked under this delusion and had it under their pillow when they lay a-dying in the back room, and asked that some words from the old book might be cut upon the tombstone under the shadow of the old country meeting-house, where they sleep today waiting for a resurrection that will never come. This book having deceived them, and having deceived the mighty intellects of the past, must not be allowed to deceive our larger, mightier, vaster, more stupendous intellects. And so out with the book from the court-room, where it is used in the solemnization of testimony. Out with it from under the foundation of church and asylum. Out with it from the domestic circle. Gather together all the Biblesthe children's Bibles, the family Bibles, those newly bound and those with lid nearly worn out and pages almost obliterated by the fingers long ago turned to dustbring them all together, and let us make a bonfire of them, and by it warm our cold criticism, and after that turn under with which is so antagonistic to man's liberty,

Now in this sentiment of infidel thinkers I cannot join, and I propose to give you some reasons why I cannot be an infidel, and so I will try to help out of this present condition any who may have been struck with the awful plague of scepticism.

First, I cannot be an infidel because infidelity has no good substitute for the consolation it proposes to take away. You know there are millions of people who get their chief consolation from this book.

Infidelity is a religioe of "Don't know. Is the soul immortal? Don't know! Is there a God? Don't know! A religion of "don't know" for the religion of "I know." "I know in whom I have believed." "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Infidelity proposes to substitute a religion of awful negatives for our religion of glorious positives.

Furthermore, I cannot be an infidel, because of the false charges infidelity is all the time making against the Bible. Perhaps the slander that has made the most impression and that some Christians have not been intelligent enough to deny is that the Bible favors polygamy. Does the God of the Bible uphold polygamy, or did he? How many wives did God make for Adam? He made one wife. Does not your common sense tell you when God started the marriage institution, he started it as he wanted it to continue? If God had frances, and, the expenditures really for Adam five wives, or ten wives, or

2. 24: "Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife." Not his wives, but his wife. How many wives did God spare for Noah in the ark? Two and two the birds; two and two the cattle; two and two the lions; two and two the human race. If the God of the Bible had favored a multiplicity of wives, he would have spared a plurality of wives. When God first launched the human race, he gave Adam one wife. At the second launching of the human race he spares for Noah one wife, for Ham one wife, for Shem one wife, for Japhet one wife. Does that look as though God favored polygamy? In Leviticus 18, 18, God thunders his prohibition of more than

made against the Bible is that it is an antagonist to woman, that it enjoins her degredation and belittles her mission. Under this impression many women have been overcome of this Plague of Infidelity. Is the Bible the enemy of women? Come into the picture gallery, the Louvre, the Luxemborg of the Bible, and see which pictures are the most honored. Here is Eve, a perfect woman, as perfect a woman as could be made by a perfect God. Here is Deborah, with her womanly arm hurling a host into the battle. Here is Miriam, leading the Israelitish orchestra on the banks of the Red Sea. Here is motherly Hannah, with her own loving hand replenishing the wardrobe of her son Samuel, the prophet. Here is Abigail, kneeling at the foot of the mountain until the four hundred wrathful men, at the sight of her beauty and prowess halt, halt—a hurricane stopped at the sight of a water-lily, a dewdrop dashing back Niagara. Here is Ruth, putting to shame all the modern slang, about mothers-in-law as she turns her back on her home and her country, and faces wild beasts and exile and death, that she may be with Naomi, her husband's mother. Here is Vashti, defying the bacchanal of a thousand drunken lords, and Esther, willing to throw her life away that she may deliver her people. And here is Dorcas, the sunlight of eternal fame gildiding her philanthropic needle, and the woman with perfume in a box made from the hills of Alabastron, pouring the holy chrism on the head of Christ, the aroma lingering all down the corridor of the centuries. Here is Lydia, the merchantess of Tyrian purple immortalized for her Christian behavior. Here is the widow with two mites, more famous than the Peabodys and the Lenoxes of all ages, while here comes in slow of gait and with careful attendants and with special honor and high favor, leaning on the arm of inspiration, one who is the joy and pride of any home so rarely fortunate as to have one, an old Christian grandmother, Grandmother Lois. Who has more worshippers today than any being that ever lived on earth, except Jesus. Christ? Mary. For what purpose did suring good markets almost at the settlers' Christ perform his first miracle upon doors To relieve the embarrassment of a earth? womanly housekeeper at the falling short of a beverage. Why did Christ break up the silence of the tomb, and tear off the shroud and rip up the rocks? It was to stop the bereavement of the two Bethany sisters. For whose comfort was Christ most anxious in the hour of dying excruciation? For a woman, an old woman, a first served. The Chicago. Milwaukee & wrinkle-faced woman, a woman who in St. Paul Railway is the only road which other days had held him in her arms, his runs directly through the reservation. To first friend, his last friend, as it is very rea h it from the East buy tickets to apt to be, his mother. All the pathes of Summit, S. D., Waubay, S. D., Wilmot the ages compressed into one utterance, S. D., or Wheaton, Minn. Summit is "Behold thy mother," Does the Bible within the reservation, the other stations antagonize woman?

Since you put the Bible on your stand in the sitting-room, has the Bible been to you, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Rail-O woman, a curse or a blessing? Why is it that a woman when she is troubled will go to her worst enemy, the Bible? Why do you not go for comfort to some of the great infidel books? No, the silly, deluded woman persists in hanging about the Bible verses, "Let not your heart be troubled," "All things work together for good. "Weeping may endure for a night." "I am the resurrection," "Peace, be still."

Furthermore; rather than invite I resist this Plague of Infidelity because it has wrought no positive good in the world and is always a hindrance. There stands Christianity. There stands infidelity. Compare what they have done. Compare their resources. There is Christianity, a prayer on her lip; a benediction on her brow; both hands full of help for all who want help; the mother of thousands of colleges; the mother of thousands of asylums for the oppressed, the blind, the sick, the lame, the imbecile; the mother of missions for the bringing back of the outcast; the mother of thousands of reformatory institutions for the saving of the lost; the mother of innumerable Sabbath schools, bringing millions of children under a drill to prepare them for respectability and usefulness, to say nothing of the great future. That is Christianity.

Infidelity scrapes no lint for the wounded, bakes no bread for the hungry, shakes up no pillow for the sick, rouses no comfort for the bereft, gilds no grave for the While Christ, our Christ, our dead. wounded Christ, our risen Christ, the Christ of this old-fashioned Bible-blessed be his glerious name forever! our Christ stands this hour pointing to the hospital or to the asylum, saying: "I was sick and ye gave me a crutch, I was blind and ye physicianed my eye-sight, I was orphaned and ye mothered my soul, I was lost on the mountain and ye brought me home; inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, ye did it for me.'

But I thank God that this plague of infidelity will be stayed. Many of those who hear me now by the Holy Ghost upon their hearts will cease to be scoffers and will become disciples, and the day will arrive when all nations will accept the Scriptures. The book is going to keep right on until the fires of the last day are kindled. Some of them will begin on one side and some on the other side of the old book. They will not find a bundle of loose manuscripts easily consumed like tinder thrown into the fire. When the fires of the last day are kindled, some will on this side, from Genesis toward Revelation, and others will burn on this side, from Revelation towards Genesis, and in all their way they will not find a single chapter or a single verse out of place. That will be the first time we can afford to do ...thout the Bible. What will be the use of the Book of Genesis, descriptive of how the world was made, when the world is destroyed? What will be the use of the prophecies when they are all fulfiled? What will be the use of the evangelistic or Pauline description of Jesus Christ when we see him face to face? What will be the use of his photograph when we have met him in glory? What will be the use of the Book of Revelation, standing as you will with your foot on the glassy sea, and your hand on the ringing harp, and your forehead chapleted with eternal coronation, amid the amethystine. and twelve-gated glories of heaven? Courtship or Marriage?-- A Chapter of Cream-Domestic Thunderstorms -- Fashion Notes -- Short Items and Pithy Points.

Marriage is an ordered garden, Courtship, a sweet tangled wood; Marriage is the sober summer, Courtship, spring, in way ward mood; Marriage is a deep, still river, Courtship, a bright laughing stream; Marriage is a dear possession, Courtship, a perplexing dream; Which of these, my wife, shall be, Crowned as best by thee and me?

Cream and Its Possibilities.

How so many people exist year after year without cream is a mystery to some of us who do not know how to get along without it.

Why farmers will scrimp themselves and sell all the cream they have or make it into butter is something I fail to understand. A little cream will go a long ways in cooking, In warming potatoes if cream is added just before taking up they will be delicious and remind us of our grandmother's cook-

Oatmeal, graham mush or rice are all very much improved by serving with cream, and there are many people who will not eat those dishes without cream. For pudding sauce there is nothing more delicious than whipped cream. Baked apples and cream or peaches and cream will melt in the mouth. For seasoning sweet corn, peas and string beans, nothing can equal a few spoons of cream.

A cake that is to be eaten soon can be put together with whipped cream. Bake a white sponge or delicate cake in three or four layers and when ready to serve spread the cream between the layers. For desert all manner of dainty dishes can be concocted with a pint or so of cream. Many icings for cake contain half a cup of cream. In making ice cream, nothing is so nice as the genuine article-cream. Whipped cream when piled high in a fancy dish and thoroughly chilled can be served in place of ice cream, and is delicious. Macaroons, small fancy cakes and Angels

Curing a Cold.

To get rid of a cold, says The Ladies' Home Journal, send to the druggist for a mixture containing sulphate of atropia one two hundred and fortieth of a grain; bi-sulphate of quinine two grains, and Fowler's solution, five drops, to each dose. Take a dose once in two hours for three or four times, or until the throat begins to feel slightly dry. If this does not entirely relieve the symptoms, repeat the treatment the next day. Copy this prescription carefully, and use it with care as some of the ingredients are poisonous. There is no danger in using it if the directions are followed exactly. Before going to bed take a warm bath. The next morning sponge the body rapidly with tepid water, rubbing it hard until the blood circulates quickly and the skin is in a glow. Take more exercise than usual, and do not sit in a hot room with the windows shut. Mix a teaspoonful of cream of tartar in a tumblerful of water and drink it during the day. If there is constipation take a gentle laxative, as a rhubarb pill. It is very important that all the avenues of the body for carrying off waste matter should be wide open.

A Hint to Philanthropists. One of the most reassuring signs of the times is the great number of wea'thy men who find the uplifting of heir fellowmen a sweeter pastime than horse-races or base-ball. Philanthropy has capital at command whenever it proves a scheme feasible. Colleges, churches, libraries, museums, hospitals, alms-houses, have long been the staple products of liberality. Some wise heads have devised model tenement-houses. But perhaps there is no great presumption in thinking that in point of necessity, feasibility, and efficiency, the first claim on the attention of the munificent and of apostles of every kind is held by the Girls' Boarding Homes .-

The Small Boy's Morals.

Mothers, do you know just what your little boy is learning when he spends his time around the barn, where the hired men are at work? Have you taken pains to find out just what kind of language is used in his presence? You would be shocked at the thought of your little girl listening to profanity, and obscene speeches and stories. You would never permit her to associate with persons who made use of such language.

Why is not the purity of your little son's character of just as much im- I cheated you, may be! portance?

It is quite a prevalent idea, and I have heard it advanced by different parents, that there is no use in trying to keep little boys from hearing such language; they are sure to hear it wonder it that there horse will balk," when they are older, and they are no may bet more apt to use it by getting used to it when they are small.

I have no sympathy with any such argument. The boy who is shielded from vulgar influences in his childhood is very apt to form refined taste in his speech and manner, so that when he is older obscentty and profanity will be disgusting to him; while the little boy with uniformed tastes, who hears bad talk, is apt to form a taste for the same. He develops into the kind of a man who loafs on street corners and is regaled in turn with obscene stories. When he got them spent a good deal of time on he gets into refined company he is as much out of his element as a fish out

What Mamma Says,

A little Washington boy, who keeps his eyes and cars open constantly, recently succeeded in rather embarrassing his father? He had been amusing himself by pretending to transact business "like papa," and insisted on being shown the respect due a full-grown citizen. But he wanted a pair of roller skates, and when the pavement. One evening his father came from his office, and for the sake of teasing the little man said: "That's nine, isn't it! The idea of a man playing like that. What would you think of papa were he to come home on skates?" by guarding her little boys from im- thoughtful silence, "mamma says you

The Star Editorial.

The Arizona Kicker man has a formida ble rival in the editor of the Neghi (U. T.) Ensign, a paper published sixty miles south of Salt Lake. He had a battle with the postmaster of his town a few days ago which he describes as follows: "While passing W. H. Gage's saloon yesterday we stepped inside on a matter of business and were accosted by our esteemed half-drunken postmaster, John Whitebeck, with the request that we have a drink with him. Being particular about our company, we politely but firmly declined, only to be urged again and again in a brutal manner, while we positively declined to accept. Stepping up to where we stood, the burly bully seized us by the collar, saying: 'I'd like to strangle you and all your associates.' We then told him to proceed to business if that was his desire, when without further warning the cowardly braggart struck us in the eye. This naturally raised our ire and we sailed in to make the fur fly. We were just beginning to get warmed up and And you had your mind on it a good were taking the same interest we have so often experienced in punching a sack of sand when Policeman Pitt appeared on the scene and stopped our fun just as we were putting our fist on our opponent's jaw.

"We went before Judge Stout and pleaded not guilty to a charge of fighting. but after hearing the evidence of a few witnesses his honor decided that we had fractured the statute, which would take a $2.50 bill to repair.

"He did not offer any suggestions as to where we cou'd get so much money, so we went out and 'dug up.'

"The other fellow blundered up to the mourner's bench, pleaded guilty, and deposited the necessary amount in postage stamrs, which released him from custody, when he waddled bac's to the saloon to renew his alcoholic saturation. It will now be in order for him to attack our office boy "

Model Girl Buying a Stamp. "One cent stamp, please."

It was a young and pretty woman who said this in the Pos-toffice the other day. She was at the head of a long line of men waiting to be served, and every man expected there would be one of those long exasperating delays that usually occur when a woman steps up to a stamp win-

But nothing of the kind happened and everybody was peasantly disappointed. In the first place, she had the exact change, and again, when she got the stamp she did not stop to ask questions or wait to affix it to her letter. She simply took her purchase and went away unmindful of the broadside of admiring glances she received. She was a model young

OBITUARY.

The home of Mr. John Lumbden was made very sad the past week by the death of his beloved wife and wife's mother, Mrs. Martha Erickson, mother and daughter having died within two days of each

The funeral services took place on Monday at 1 o'clock p. m., the Rev. Forgersen officiating. The Rev. gentleman made two very appropriate addresses in the English and Norwegian languages. Mr. Geo. Roberts, Mrs. J. A. Riadel and Mrs. Sam'l O. Olin sang several appropriate hymns. The floral display was excellent. There was a large gathering of sympathizing friends present, among them a delegation from Anna Colbjornsen Lodge, No. 810 K. and L. of Honor of which Mrs. Erickson was a member. Mrs. Lamben's pallbearers were D. Cowing, A. F. Brown, Goodwillie, Jas. Reid, A. L. Lambden, and F. W. Lambden, and Mrs. Erickson's pall bearers were members of the K. and L. of Honor. The remains were taken to Graceland. Me. Lambden and Mr. Erickson are very much grieved over their sad loss. They have the sympathy of a host of friends in their hour cf grief.

A BIG FLOOD.

The only thing that will wet a man who wears a "Fish Brand Sheker" is a flood; but even then he must be under water. This statement may seem strong, but a coat that will stand a two days' storm without leaking, and will not rip or tear, is sure to fill the bifl. The additional advantage is that it costs less and wears longer than any other waterproof coat. Have you one? If not, why do you wait until it rains? Sold everywhere. Buy it now. It is a great mistake to wait until it rains to buy a waterproof coat. The time to buy is when the dealer has a clean, fresh stock. Be sure the coat is stamped with the "Fish Brand" Trade Mark, and you will get he best waterproof coat ever made. Don't accept any inferior coat when you can have the "Fish Brand Slicker" delivered without extra cost. Particulars and illustrated catalogue free.
