> SPARLAND, Ill., July 1 .- About twelve years ago an esteemed citizen named John Carver died, leaving one daughter and three sons. Subsequently his widow, whom he had left about $15,000, married a mere boy, Royal Frisby. Frisby at once began spending the money in debauchery.

The citizens have for a long time been in arms against Frisby and on Saturday a White-Cap circular was sent to him and several sent to heads of families with an attached prayer, "Help us for humanity's sake," and signed by the Widow Carver and her three sons.

The original circular detailed how while yet the husband of Mrs. Carver Frisby had ruined her eldest daughter. Mrs. Frisby was compelled by threats to witness the grossest of outrages by her husband until her daughter's shame and the shame of her household became public property.

Then she secured a divorce and immediatelythereafter Frisby induced the daughter, who had born him a second natural child, to marry him.

Sunday not having heeded the warning of the circular, Prisby stepped out of his house and before he had gone twenty feet from the door he was filled full of buckshot and instantly killed. The coroner's jury held Gip Culver. Mrs. Laura Frisby and her son, John Carver, for the killing.

Victims of the lowa Storm Find

Shelter in Public Buildings. CHEROKEE. Iowa, June 30 .-- The work of caring for the homeless has been systematized. All the public buildings have been placed at their disposal. The damage between Storm Lake and Onawa repaired in two davs after the storm ceased, The Little Sioux river bridge east of this city, a Howe truss 150 feet long, resting on stone piers, and a 400-foot pile trestle approach were carried away. The company expects to have the bridge so trains can pass by to-night. The line between Cherokee and Sioux Falls will be fixed by noon to-day and business will be resumed to-morrow to The line between Cherokee and Lemars will resume business by next Wednesday night. The water was so high on the Onawa branch that it has been impossible up to this time for men to get near the tracks, as all the wagon bridges are carried away. By this evening they hope to have it repaired between Cherokee and Correctionville so business can be resumed between these points. The crops along the Illinois central are not seriously damaged, except in the ravines and low lands.

The Adjutant-General has shipped sixty tents for the use of the homeless people. Fifty houses are lost and at least one hundred wrecked.

Two Chinese Victims of the Disease Murdered by Their Countrymen.

OTTAWA, Ont., June 30.—Dr. Smith. superintendent of the Tracadie lazar etto, has returned from British Columbia, whither he was sent to investigate cases of leprosy among the Chinese in that province. He found that all the developed cases in Victoria, six in number, had been segregated on an island about seventeen miles from Vancouver, where they have been supplied with necessaries sufficient to last them eight months. He believes that most cases of leprosy will be found in Victoria and New Westminster, for the reason that when the Chinamen observe symptoms of leprosy in a countryman they immediately expel him from the settlement and the outcast naturally wanders to the more populous centers, where he is more likely to be unobserved. In two cases Dr. Smith found that the victims of the loathsome disease were secretly slain by their fellow country-

THE WHEAT CROP BEING GATHERED IN

Farmers Throughout Illinois, Indiana, Missouri and Kansas are Busy-Condition of the Crops.

WASHINGTON, June 30 .- The following is the weather crop bulletin issued by the signal office:

"The week has been firmer than usual east of the Rocky mountains except on the New England and Florida coasts, where the temperature was slightly below the normal. There was a slight excess generally throughout the cotton region, but the most marked excess occurred in the States north of the Ohio river, including the lake region, where the daily excess ranged from three to six degrees above normal. "In Wisconsin favorable weather has improved crop and fruit conditions during the last week; the cranberry crop will be slightly less than last year owing to May frost. Rain is needed badly in eastern and central counties. "In Missouri it has been a fine week for all farm operations. Wheat harvest is two-thirds finished; the yield is good.

The injury from rain was less than expected. Oats are improving. Meadows were never better. "In Ohio the week was very favorable. Grain crops are promising; corn weedy in places; apples dropping.

Wheat harvest has commenced in the middle section; large yield. "Excessive rains have occurred in eastern Texas and thence northward to Missouri, in western Iowa, Nebraska, and portions of Colorado, New Mexico, Minnesota, and the Dakotas. More than the usual amount of rain is reported from the west portion of the middle Atlantic States, the upper Ohio valley, the New England coast, and over limited areas in the south Atlantic States. "The rainfall in western Iowa and in eastern and northern Nebraska ranged from three to five inches, and Irishmen are concerned. Parnell only local observers report much greater rainfall, causing destructive floods and injury to crops. "In Indiana the weather was very favorable to wheat harvest, which is nearly completed. Rye, clover and hay are also being harvested; corn is growing very fast; oats are much improved. "In Michigan local rains were poorly distributed and more rain is needed. Crops are, however, doing well. A light crop of wheat will be ready for harvest in the southern counties next

"Kansas reports excessive rains in the Cottonwood, Neosho and Verdigris valleys. Rain was deficient in the west. Conditions are greatly beneficial to all crops except in the flooded districts, the wheat harvest and general. Corn is fair; flax and oats fine. TOLD BY PHILIP BRAND, M. D., LONDON.

But the thought of Madeline being alone at that lonely house troubled him greatly. The dead woman had no sons or daughters all the anxiety and responsibility connected with her affairs would fall on the poor girl. The next day he threw himself into the Scotch Express, and started for her far-away home.

On arriving there he found it occupied only by the rough farm servants. They seemed in a state of wonderment, and volubly questioned Carriston as to the whereabouts of Madeline. The question sent a chill of fear to his heart. He answered their questions by others, and soon learnt all they had to communi-

Little enough it was. On the morning after the old woman's funeral Madeline had gone to Callendar to ask the advice of an old friend of her aunt's as to what steps should now be taken. She had neither been to this friend, nor had she returned home. She had, however, sent a message that she must go to London at once, and would write from there. That was the last heard of her-all that was known about her.

Upon hearing this news Carriston became a prey to the acutest terror—an emotion which was quite inexplicable to the honest people, his informants. The girl had gone, but she had sent no word whither she had gone. True, they did not know the reason for her departure, so sudden and without luggage of any description-true, she had not written as promised, but no doubt they would hear from her to-morrow. Carriston knew better. Without revealing the extent of his fears, he flew back to Callendar. Inquiries at the railway station informed him that she had gone, or had purposed going, to London, but whether she ever reached it, or whether any trace of her could be found there, was, at least, a matter of doubt. No good could be gained by remaining in Scotland, so he traveled back at once to town, half distracted, sleepless, and racking his brain to know where to look for her.

"She has been decoyed away," he said in conclusion. "She is hidden, imprisoned somewhere. And I know, as well as if he told me, who has done this thing. I can trace Ralph Carriston's cursed hand through it

I glanced at him askance. This morbid suspicion of his cousin amounted almost to monomania. He had told the tale of Madeline's disappearance clearly and tersely; but when he began to account for it his theory was a wild and untenable one. However much he suspected Ralph Carriston of longing to stand in his shoes, I could see no object for the crime of which he accused him, that of decoying away Madeline Rowan.

"But why should he have done this?" I asked. "To prevent your marriage? You are young-he must have foreseen that you would marry some day."

Carriston leaned toward me, and dropped his voice to a whisper. "This is his reason," he said-"this is why

I come to you. You are not the only one who has entirely misread my nature, and seen a strong tendency to insanity in it. Of course, I know that you are all wrong, but I know that Ralph Carriston has stolen my love-stolen her because he thinks and hopes that her loss will drive me mad-perhaps drive me to kill myself. I went straight to him-I have just come from him-Brand, I tell you that when I taxed him with the crime -when I raved at him-when I threatened to tear the life out of him-his cold, wicked eyes leapt with joy. I heard him mutter between his teeth, 'Men have been put in straitwaistcoats for less than this. Then I knew why he had done this. I curbed myself and left him. Most likely he will try to shut me up as a lunatic; but I count upon your protection-count upon your help to find my love."

That any man could be guilty of such a subtle refinement of crime as that of which he accused his cousin seemed to me, if not impossible, at least improbable. But as at present there was no doubt about my friend's sanity I promised my aid readily.

"And now," I said, "me dear boy, I won't hear another word to-night. Nothing can be done until to-morrow; then we will consult as to what steps should be taken. Drink this and go to bed-yes, you are as sane as I am, but, remember, insomnia soon drives the strongest man out of his senses.'

I poured out an opiate. He drank it obediently. Before I left him for the night I saw him in bed and sleeping a heavy sleep.

VI. The advantage to one who writes, not a tale of imagination, but a simple record of events, is this; He need not be bound by the recognized canons of the story-telling artneed not exercise his ingenuity to mislead his reader-need not suppress some things and lay undue stress on others to create mysteries to be cleared up at the end of the tale. Therefore, using the privilege of a plain narnator, I shall here give some account of what became of Miss Rowan, as, so far as I can remember, I heard it some time afterward from her own lips.

The old Scotchwoman's funeral over, and those friends who had been present departed, Madeline was left in the little farmhouse alone, save for the presence of the two servants. Several kind bodies had offered to come and stay with her, but she had declined the offers. She was in no mood for company, and perhaps being of such a different race and breed would not have found much comfort in the rough homely sympathy which was offered to her. She preferred being alone with her grief-grief which after all was bound to be much lightened by the thought of her own approaching happiness, for the day was drawing near when her lover would cross the Border and bear his bonny bride away.-She felt sure that she would not be long alone—that the moment Carriston heard of her aunt's death he would come to her assistance. In such a peaceful, God-fearing neighborhood she had no fear of being left without protection. Moreover, her position in the house was well defined. The old woman, who was childless, had left her niece all of which she died possessed. So Madeline decided to wait quietly until she heard from her lover.

Still there were business matters to be attended to, and at the funeral Mr. Douglas, of Callendar, the executor under the will, had suggested that an early interview would be desirable. He offered to drive out to the little farm the next day, but Miss Rowan, who had to see to some feminine necessaries which could only be supplied by shops, decided that she would come to the town instead of troubling Mr. Douglas to drive so far out.

Madeline, in spite of the superstitious elenent in her character, was a brave girl, and in spite of her refined style of beauty, strong and healthy. Early hours were the rule in that humble home, so before seven o'clock in the morning she was ready to start on her drive to the little town. At first she thought eutdoor work; but he was busy about some- Har mind.

thing or other, and besides, was a garrulous lad who would be certain to chatter the whole way, and this morning Miss Rowan wanted no companions, save her own mingled thoughts of sadness and joy. She knew every inch of the road-she feared no evil-she would be home again long before nightfallthe pony was quiet and sure-footed-so away went Madeline in the strong primitive vehicle on her lonely welve miles' drive through the fair scenery. She passed few people on the road. Indeed, she remembered meeting no one except one or two pedestrian tourists, who like sensible men were doing a portion of their day's task in the early morning. I have no doubt but Miss Rowan seemed to them a passing vision of loveliness. But when she was a mile or two from Callendar she saw a boy on a pony. The boy, who must have known her by sight, stopped, and handed her a telegram. She had to pay several shillings for the delivery, of the mes-sage, so far from the station. The boy galloped away, congratulating himself on having been spared a long ride, and Miss Rowan tore open the envelope left in her hands.

The message was brief:- "Mr. Carr is seriously ill. Come at once. You will be met in Madeline did not scream or faint. She gave one low moan of pain, set her teeth, and with the face of one in a dream drove as quickly as she could to Callendar, straight to the :ailway station. Fortunately, or rather unfortunately, she had money with her, so she did not waste time in going to Mr. Douglas. In spite of the crushing blow she had received the girl had all her wits about her. A train would start in ten minutes' time. She took her ticket, then found an idler outside the station, and paid him to take the pony and carriage back to the farm, with the message as repeated to Carriston.

. The journey passed like a long dream. The girl could think of nothing but her lover, dy-ing, dying-perhaps dead before she could reach him. The miles flew by unnoticed; twilight crept on; the carriage grew dark; at last-London at last! Miss Rowan stepped out on the broad platform, not knowing what to do or where to turn. Presently a tall welldressed man came up to her, and removing his hat, addressed her by name. The promise as to her being met had been kept.

She clasped her hands. "Tell me-oh tell me, he is not dead," she cried. "Mr. Carr is not dead. He is ill, very illdelirious and calling for you."

"Where is he? Oh take me to him?" "He is miles and miles from here—at a friend's house. I have been deputed to meet you and to accompany you, if you feel strong enough to continue the journey at once." "Come," said Madeline. "Take me to him." "Your luggage?" asked the gentleman. "I have none. Come!" "You must take some refreshment."

"I need nothing. Come!" The gentleman glanced at his watch. There is just time," he said. He called a cab, told the driver to go at top speed. They reached Paddington just in time to catch the

During the drive across London Madeline asked many questions, and learnt from her companion that Mr. Carr had been staying for a day or two at a friend's house in the West of England. That yesterday he had fallen from his horse and sustained such injuries that his life was despaired of. He had been continually calling for Madeline. They telegraphed as soon as possible-for which act Miss Rowan thanked her companion with tears in her eyes.

Her conductor did not say much of his own accord, but in replying to her questions he was politely sympathetic. She thought of little outside the fearful picture which filled every corner of her brain, but from her conductor's manner received the impression that he was a medical adviser who had seen the sufferer, and assisted in the treatment of the case. She did not ask his name, nor did he reveal it.

At Padeington he placed her in a ladies' carriage and left her.

He was a smoker, he said. She wondered somewhat at this desertion. Then the train sped down West. At the large stations the gentleman came to her and offered her refreshments. Hunger seemed to have left her; but she accepted a cup of tea once or twice. At last sorrow, fatigue, and weakness produced by such a prolonged fast had their natural effect. With the tears still on her lashes the girl fell asleep, and must have slept for many miles; a sleep unbroken by stoppages at stations.

Her conductor at last aroused her. He stood at the door of the carriage. "We must get out here," he said. All the momentarilyforgetten anguish came back to her as she stood beside him on the almost unoccupied platform.

"Are we there at last?" she asked. "I am sorry to say we have still a long drive; would you like to rest first?"

"No-no. Come on, if you please." She spoke with feverish eagerness.

The man bowed. "A carriage waits," he

Outside the station was a carriage of some sort, drawn by one horse, and driven by a man muffled up to the eyes. It was still night, but Madeline fancied dawn could not be far off. Her conductor opened the door of the carriage and waited for her to enter

She paused. "Ask him-that man must know if---- "I am most remiss," said the gentleman. He exchanged a few words with the driver, and coming back, told Madeline that Mr. Carr was still alive, sensible, and expecting her eagerly.

"Oh, please, please drive fast," said the poor girl, springing into the carriage. The gentleman seated himself beside her, and for a long time they drove on in silence. At last they stopped. The dawn was just glimmering. They alighted in front of a house. The door was open. Madeline entered swiftly. "Which way-which way?" she asked. She was too agitated to n tice any surroundings;

her one wish was to reach her lover. "Allow me," said the conductor, passing her. "This way; please follow me." He went up a short flight of stairs, then paused, and opened a door quietly. He stood aside for the girl to enter. The room was dimly lit, and contained a bed with drawn curtains. Madeline flew past her traveling companion, and, as she threw herself on her knees beside the bed upon which she expected to see the helpless and shattered form of the man she loved, heard, or fancied she heard, the door locked tehind her.

VII.

Carriston slept on late into the next day. Knowing that every moment of bodily and mental rest was a precious boon to him, I left him undisturbed. He was still fast asleep when, about midday, a gentleman called upon me. He sent up no card, and I supposed he came to consult me professionally.

The moment he entered my room I recognized him. He was the thin-lipped, gentlemanly person whom I had met on my journey to Bournemouth last spring-the man who had seemed so much impressed by my views on insanity, and had manifested such interest in the description I had given-without iking with her the boy who did the rough | mentioning any name of Carriston's pecu-

"You will forgive it," he added, "when I tell you my name is Ralph Carriston." Remembering our chance conversation, the thought that, after all, Charles Carriston's wild suspicion was well-founded, flashed through me like lightning. My great-hope was that my visitor might not remember my face as I remembered his. 1 bowed coldly but said nothing.

"I believe, Dr. Brand," he continued, "you have a young relative of mine at present staying with you?" "Yes, Mr. Carriston is my guest," I answer-

I pretended to ignore the man's meaning, and answered smilingly, "Violence is the last thing I should look for. He is tired out and exhausted by travel, and is in great distrese. That, I believe, is the whole of his complaint."

"Yes, yes, to be sure, poor boy. His sweetheart has left him or something. But as a next ten years will cut a wide swath doctor you must know that his mental condition is not quite what it should be. His friends are very anxious about him. They fear that a little restraint-temporary, I hope ask your advice and aid."

"In what, Mr. Carriston?" "In this. A young man can't be left free have brought Dr. Daley with me-you know him of course. He is below in my carriage. I will call him up, with your permission. He could then see poor Charles, and the needful certificate could be signed by you two doc-

Dr. Daley—whoever he may be—could sign no certificate, and in our all in. It starts behind the pulpit, day no asylum would dare to keep Mr. Carriston within its walls."

An unpleasant sinister look crossed my listener's face, but his voice still remained bland and suave. "I am sorry to differ from you, Dr. Brand," he said, "but I know him better than you do. I have seen him as you have never yet seen him. Only last night he came to me in a frantic state. I expected every moment he would make a murderous attack on me."

'Terhaps he fancied he had some reasons for anger," I said.

Ralph Carriston looked at me with those cold eyes of which his cousin had spoken. "If the boy has succeeded in converting you to any of his delusions I can only say that doctors are more credulous than I fancied. But the question is not worth arguing. You decline to assist me, so I must do without you. Good-morning, Dr. Brand."

He left the room as gracefully as he had entered it. I remained in a state of doubt. It was curious that Ralph Carriston turned out to be the man whom I had met in the train; but the evidence offered by the coincidence was not enough to convict him of the crime of endeavoring to drive his cousin mad by such a far-fetched stratagem as the inveigling away of Madeline Rowan. Besides. even in wishing to prove Charles Carriston mad, he had much to say on his side. Supposing him to be unocent of having abducted Madeline, Carriston's violent behavior on the preceding evening must have seemed very much like insanity. In spite of the aversion with which Ralph Carriston inspired me, I scarcely knew which side to believe. Carriston still slept; so when out on my afternoon rounds I left a note, begging him to remain in the house until my return. Then I found him up, dressed, and looking much more like himself. When I entered dinner was on the table, so not until that meal was over could we talk unrestrainedly upon the subject which was uppermost in

THRILLING SERMON AT NEW BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

Dr. Talmage Preaches from Isaiah 53, 6-All We Like Sheep Have Gone Astray, and the Lord Hath Laid on Him Our Iniquity.

His subject is "Astray, but Recovered," and his text, Isaiah 53:6: he remains firm in the path of Or-"All we like sheep have gone astray:

absorbing and momentous. The first half of my text is an indictment; "All we like sheep have gone astray." Some one says: "Can you not drop the first word? that to go about threatening his friends' lives. I is too general; that sweep; too great a circle. Some man rises in the audience and he looks over on the opposite side of the house, and he says; "There is a blasphemer, and I understand how he has gone astray. And there in another part of the house is a defrauder and he has gone astray. And there is an impure person and he has sweeps the circuit of the room and comes back to the point where it started. when it says: "All we like sheep have gone astray." I can very easily understandwhy Martin Luther threw up his hands after he had found the Bible and cried out: "O! my sins, my sins," and why the publicau, according to the custom to this day in the East, when they have any great grief, began to beat himself and cry as he smote upon his breast: "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Did your business associates in that day of darkness and trouble give you any especial condolence? Business exasperated you, business wore you out, business left you limp as a rag, business made you made. You got dollars, but you got no peace. God have mercy on the man who has nothing but business to comfort him. The world afforded you no luxuriant pasturage, A famous English actor stood on the stage impersonating, and thunders of applause came down from the galleries, and many thought it was the proudest moment of his life; but there was a man asleep just in front of him and the fact that that man was indifferent and somnolent spoiled all the occasion for him, and he cried "Wake up, wake up!" so one little annovance in life has been more prevailing in your mind than all the brilliant congratulations and successes! Poor pasturage for your soul you found in this world. The world has cheated. Some of you got astray by looking for better pasturage; others by being scared of the dogs. The hound gets over into the pasture field. The poor things fly in every direction. In a few moments they are torn of the hedges and they are plashed of the ditch, and the lost sheep never gets home unless the farmer goes after it. There is nothing so thoroughly lost as a lost sheep. It may have been in 1857, during the financial panie, or during the financial stress in the fall of 1873, when you got astray. You almost became an atheist. You said: "Where is God, that honest men go down and thieves prosper?" You were dogged of creditors, you were dogged of the banks, you were dogged of worldly disaster, and some that of the Yellowstone River, 350 feet of you went into misanthropy, and some of you took to strong drink, and others of you fled out of Christian association, and you got astray. O! man, that was the last time when you ought to have forsaken God. Standing amid the foundering of your earthly fortunes, how could you get along without a God to comfort you, and a God to deliver you, and a God to help you, and a God to save you? You tell me you have been through enough business trouble almost to kill you. I know it. coal in the world are in Pennsylvania, I cannot understand how the boat could live one hour in that chopped sea. But I do not know by what process you got astray; some in one way, and some in another, and if you could really see the position some of you occupy before God this morning, your soul would burst into an agony of tears and you would pelt the heavens with the ery: "God have mercy!" Sinai's bat-teries have been unlimbered above your soul and at times you have heard it thunder "The wages of sin is death." "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin: and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."

But the last part of my text opens a door wide enough to let us all out and to let all heaven in. Sound it on the organs with all the stops out. Thrum it on the harps with all the strings whether they are palatable or not. In atune. With all the melody possible let the heavens sound it to the earth and let the earth tell it to the heavens, "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." I am glad that the prophet did not stop to explain whom he meant by "him." Him of the manger, kim of the bloody sweat, him of the resurrection throne, him of the crucifixion agony. I was going down the street, thinking that no one cared for me, when a young man tapped me on the shoulder and said: 'George, come with me and I will do you good.' I looked at him to see whether he was joking or not. I saw he was in earnest, and I said: 'What do you mean, sir? 'Well,' he replied, 'I mean if you will come to the meeting to-night I will be very glad to introduce you. I will meet you at the door. Will you come?' Said I, 'I will.' I went to the place where I was tarrying. In this day of merciful visitation, while many are coming into the kingdom of God, join the procession heavenward. Seated among us during a service was a man who came in and said: "I don't know that there is any God." That was on Friday night. I said: "We will kneel down and find out whether there is any God." And in the second seat of the pulpit we knelt. He said: "I have found him. There is a God, a perdoning God. I feel him here." He knelt in the darkness of sin. He arose two minutes afterward in the liberty of the Cospel; while another sitting under the gallery on Friday night and said: "My opportunity is gone; last week I might have been saved, but now the door is shut." And another from the very midst of the meeting, during the week, rushed out of the front door of the Tabernacle, saying: "I am a lost man." 'Behold! the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world." "Now is the accepted time Now is the day of salvation." "It is appointed unto all men once to die, and after that-the judgment!"

The owl's reputation for wisdom is quite simple in its origin. Even men are wiser the next morning after they have been out all night.

The highest elevated road in the world is about to be built at Naples. It is intended to connect the central part of Naples with the Corso Vittorio Emanuele. It will be suspended from towers 390 feet high, in which will be elevators to hoist passengers to the stations. The road will be operated by electricity, and the cost is estimated at $1,900,000.

The cold weather last winter in England has proved fatal to the animals in the London zoological gardens. Some of the losses are almost irreparable. Among these may be mentioned the chimpanzee, a gray lemur, the second specimen ever seen alive in England; an aard vark, a gnu, a snow leopard, the first ever seen alive in Europe, and the African black rhinoceros.

SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1891.

THE great Colorado desert has for the past few days been gradually turning into a vast lake. Various causes have been given for this phenomenon, but so far nothing certain has been ascertained.

For several years past the West Side has been clamoring, and with reason, for additional transportation street to Kedzie avenue. facilities, in the way of cross town and additional lines to the center of the City. Where the South and North sides each have their cable and elevated roads, either in running order or nearly so, the West side has been compelled to exist with its old time street cars. In consequence of this vast portions of this section are from half a mile to two miles from any transportation facilities. A large section in the west and northwest of Chicago is thus unprovided for. This want for the largest portion of Chicago should be at once supplied, and supplied in the best possible manner. The policy of laying surface tracks which in a few years will be inadequate should be fought by every West Sider. What is needed is an elevated electric road, and without doubt the property owners of the West Side will demand such.

Twenty-one nations have now acted invitations to participate in the World's fair in Chicago, and it is known that many other nations will in the next few weeks signify their intention to participate. There is much reason to expect a successful World's Exposition at Chicago with a proper management. The fame of the Philadelphia Exposition of 1876 still holds among European manufacturers, who reaped a rich harvest from their exhibits at that place. There seems to be a general intention among all civilized nations to take part in the Chicago Exposition if it is properly arranged. Only a gross misuse of power on the part of the management will stand between the Chicago Exposition and success. Many of the exhibits, it is now known, will be of great interest. From all over the United States have come requests from the leading industrial associations and organizations for space in the exhibition. A strong movement is already under way to land the Chicago Exhibition in position of assured success, and it only remains for the managers and directors to work honestly and fairly together to insure success.

But it must be noted seriously and in all frankness that the success of the Exposition is not yet assured, because there still remains a wide-spread suspicion that the management has pandered too much to speculators and jobbers, and that there may be ground for future speculations in the arrangement of the Exposition. Whether the conduct of the management has been such as to lend color to such suspicions is immaterial in this connection. The main idea to impress upon those who have charge of the World's Fair is that mistrust and suspicion have existed in the past and have already stood in the way of success. By a greater publicity and a careful abstinence from anything that can be construed into a "job" the directors may assure that success; but by the least tampering with the land speculations and other "little scheemes" which have been cultivated since Chicago was choosen as the site, they will wreck not only the Exposition of 1893, but their own reputation as sure as the sun shines. They should bear that fact in mind now and in the future.

GRADUATING EXERCISES OF CLASS '91, HELD IN TURNER HALL.

Thursday, June 25, 1891, will be a Day Long Remembered by the Young Ladies and Gentlemen Just Entering on a Long Career of Usefulness.

In former years every body crowded into the halls where would occur the holding of the graduating exercises of the Pacific School, but this year to gain admission to the exercises a ticket was necessary. The hall was decorated with flowers and potted plants, and filled to overflowing with parents and friends of the class. On each side of the stage the class motto, "Knowlside of the stage the class motto, "Knowledge is Power," in gold letters could be seen. The stage was bright with color, the white dresses of the young ladies forming a pretty contrast to the floral decorations, which were tastefully grouped Investment Securities, about the stage. A feature of the exercises was the chorus of twenty-five children from the sixth and seventh grades, rendering the songs "Welcome" and "All Nature New is Blooming." To the Amphion Qurtette is due credit in which they highly entertained the audience with their beautiful singing.

The exercises began with a song extitled "Welcome," by the pupils of the sixth and seventh grades. Following Miss Hattie E. Peck delivered her graduating essay on "Sponges;" William W. Simons' subject, "Keep Off the Grass," was rendered with effect; the essay of Miss Katie A. Moan, entitled "The Pilgrims," showed considerable work and thought; Miss Lillian H. McCarthy's recitation of "Chinese Lillies" was bright and with effect and won well-merited applause; the Amphion Quartette, composed of the following gentlemen, T. H. Matthews, D. L. Amphion Quartette, composed of the following gentlemen, T. H. Matthews, D. L. Foskette, B. M. Leadbeater, H. V. Culp, rendered the beautiful song entitled "Merrily Goes Our Bark. Research Maplewood will in future be careful to see that he is the possessor of at least twelve cents in good currency before asking one of our young belies to ride out on the cars from the city as his special guest. A few days ago the chap in question boarded the one o'clock train at the Kinzie street station accompanied by the young damsel in question. He looked supremely happy in the companionship of the beautiful young until finish the game was sharp, and no girl, and all went well until the conductor made his rounds. It was then the fun commenced. He proffered his individual ticket requesting the knight of the punch to clip off two squares, but this the rail- by sending them home defeated. That road man would not do. Pocket after remains to be seen. The club play a pocket was carefully examined, but no coin could be found, and as the young man turned all the colors of the rainbow, and the people in the car were laughing behind their sleeves, the young lady gracefully whipped out a well-filled purse a d presented her own ticket. Words were few and far between the two during the balance of the journey.

A COMING EVENT.

An event of unusual interest to the residents of Maplewood will be the testimonial concert and entertainment tendered to Mr. George Roberts by the "Maplewood Operettes," of which he is musical director. The event will occur at the Maplewood Opera House on Saturday evening. July 11, and will doubtless be well patronized. Mr. Roberts has been a zealogs worker in the interest of the organization and much of its success is due to his energetic efforts.

The Operettes will be assisted by such well-known persons as Prof. Silas Beng. the well-known huntorist; Mr. Hans Schoessling, violin soloist; Mr. D. Rob-erts, baritone; Wm. Thrumston, tenor; the Columbia Male Quartette, and others.

The first part of the programme will consist of vocal and instrumental solos, comic songs, four-part songs for male voices, and several numbers in the elocutionary line. The latter half of the entertainment will be doubly interesting from the fact that the Operettes will present the pretty and popular opera "Trial by Jury." The several "dramatis personi" have worked hard to bring their parts to perfection, and an exceptionally fine rendition of the opera may reasonably be expected. Following is the cast of characters:

Judge, E. W. Freeman; Plaintiff (Angelina), Miss Elizabeth Beebe; Defendant (Edwin), George Roberts: Council. Wm. Thrumston; Usher, E. C. Jensen; Foreman of Jury, H. W. Jensen; the twelve charming bridesmaids, the twelve intelligent jurymen, the sympathetic spectators in

The admission is 25 cents, reserved seats 35 cents.

Mr. Henry A. Michaels, a member of Hook and Ladder Co. No. 13, met with a serious accident on Wednesday afternoon. While 'en regular off' his company responded to a still alarm of fire on Crawford and Armitage avenues. When near the point of Milwaukee and Armitage avenues Michaels, who happened to be in that vicinity, saw them and was making for the truck. Captain John Tangney saw what he was about and shouted, "Look out, Henry! don't attempt to get on!" uoon which he hesitated a moment, but took a second thought and made an attempt to beard the truck; he missed his footing and fell under the truck, the hind wheels of which passed over him. The captain at the same time shouting to the driver. Eugene Burke, to stop. The captain had him removed to Moyens' drug store and called in two doctors, and also rang up the patrol with the intention of having him removed to the hospital, but upon Mr. Michaels' request he was taken to his home, at 226 Myrtle avenue. It was found that several bones were broken. Mr. Michaels does not attach any blame to anyone but himself; his first exclamation on being picked up was, "Oh. my God, Cap.
I am all broke up, but it's my own fault." Captain Tangney speaks very highly of Michaels, says he is a splendid fellow and an excellent fireman. He appears to be yery much cut up over the accident.

HERMOSA.

A fire started in some unknown manner in the small farmhouse on the old Rustenberg farm, just below Purdy's store, Wednesday afternoon. It was rented by a German and his family who ran a garden farm. Some boys got out the superannuated hope cart, given by the citp, and dragged it to the fire, and after some delay a sream was directed at the fire. It fell ten feet from the nuzzle and so was useless. In half an hour the city fire department arrived and put the fire out.

Mr. Wm. Burke and Guv Coleman left last Wednesday for Iowa City, where the former has a stock farm. Mr. Guy goes o t for a vacation while Mr. Burke intends to live the free and independent life of a farmer. In a social way Mr. Burke enlivened this town as no other young man area has and it is needless to say that his many friends are sorry to past with him. Norwood Park

THE COWBOY KNOWS!

Trying to hold a drove of cattle together in a drenching rain means an amount of exposure which few can withstand without serious results. If sickness does not follow, it will be found that such hardship usually brings on rheumatism and similar complaints. At such times a "Fish Brand Slicker" is worth its weight in gold, and is invaluable to any one exposed to stormy weather. For all saddle uses, you want a Pommel Slicker, which keeps the entire saddle, pommel, and cantle dry, and completely envelopes the rider from head to foot. He can't get wet, whatever the weather. And, besides keeping him dry, it keeps him warm. Every range rider has one. Why shouldn't you? Beware of worthless imitations; every garment stamped with "Fish Brand" Trade Mark. Don't accept any inferior coat when you can have the "Fish Brand Slicker" delivered without extra cost. Particulars and illustrated catalogue free.

ALONE. My life puts forth to sea alone: The skies are dark above,
All round I hear gray waters moan—
Alas for vanished love! 'O lonely life that pressath on Across these wastes of years, Where are the guiding pilots gone-

A VAGARY.

I believe that there was something spoken about the thing to begin with. It was to all appearances a common rubber toy balloon, and I bought it from a neatly dressed old German. who, with his string of many colored bubbles was walking up and down the street. I had noted his pleased look and happy smile when the children across the way patronized him, and I wanted to see him smile again-so] beckoned him to come across the street, and I bought a balloon myself.

Of course, it did look ridiculous for an old maid like me to be buying a childish thing like that, but in my heart I had always wanted one of the airy things, and had never had the courage to buy one before. Even now I made some silly apology to the woman next door, and said that I thought it would be a nice thing to amuse the dogs.

I selected from among the brightly colored globes one of a peculiar bluishwhite tint. It was the only one of that color—the rest were all of rainbow hues, and among the reds, greens, purples, and yellows this one looked very odd.

I noticed that the old man's face fell as I designated my choice, and in his broken English he tried to dissuade me from taking that one. "Nein, nein, dis shone, see!" said he, pointing to a yellow one like a great golden orange; but I held to my choice, and finally, finding his remonstrance in vain, the old fellow reluctantly cut the string and put the end into my hand, with a shake of his head and a muttered "Ungluck!"—and I did not get a smile from him after all.

I took my purchase into the house, and as I went back to my painting I tied it to the back of my chair, where I quite forgot it until, turning suddenly, I was startled to see the pale, white thing hovering over my head. It looked so unearthly, so weird, that it gave me an idea, and I caught up a brush filled with red paint and by a few touches I transformed the thing into the most hideous face I ever have seen. The eyes were wide and staring, the nostrils open, and the mouth was like that of a skull.

I am not usually very clever with the brush, but this time my hand flew as though guided by an unseen power. and soon the blood-red eyes glared and the horrid mouth grinned back at me with such a fiendish expression that I began to feel a bit creepy. My hand shook a little, for it was a delicate task to put the paint on without breaking the thin rubber-and, candidly, I was getting nervous.

I know not what spirit of evil impelled me, but having finished this work I carefully broke off nearly all of the string attached and weighted the balloon with a bit of tissue until it would just float about midmay between the floor and the ceiling, and I then set it loose.

I can not describe my sensations of half-amusement, half-awe as I saw this thing which I had made floating ghostly and pale, like a disembodied spirit. Now high, now low, with a slow but unceasing motion, it wandered about the great rooms, the staring eyes peering into dark corners and above cupboards and behind pictures, as though searching for something.

I called in the dogs. Punch, the fat pug, came lumbering in without seeing anything at all; but the little foxterrier, alive to some strange influence, sniffed about in the corners and under the furniture until, glancing overhead, he saw the frightful face floating toward him. With a yelp of terror be clapped what there was of hie tail under him and ran from the room, followed by the terrified Punch, who by this time had seen the thing, toc.

No amount of coaxing would induce the dogs to return, and I began to congratulate myself that the housemaid had gone home for a visit and that no one would come into that part of the house before I could get the thing out of the way for I was beginning to feel rather ashamed of the whole perform-

I followed the uncanny head from room to room, and tried by climbing upon chairs to catch it, but it kept always just out of my reach. On and on it went, still peering and staring, its rod eyeballs turned now up, now down, as it roved in its fruitless quest.

At last it turned into the hall and slowly rose to the floor above. I saw it rise steadily to the skylight and look out for an instant, and then shrink back as if to get away from the light. and then it began its tour through the upper rooms.

In the front chamber there was a large old-fashioned pier glass, which had long before graced the parlor, but had been lately, at my order, relegated to this room; my fancy being that mirrors were in better taste in sleeping rooms. The restless moving thing stopped before this and poised, still, for the first time. The eager eyes seemed to have found what they had been seeking. Steadily they stared at their horrible reflection, then they

it? Had I made a monster, a Franken, A SAD, PITIFUL BEAUTY.

Although I did not at first look at it, knew that it was near me; I could feel its presence, and at last I turned and looked it full in the face. Such a face! I looked at my work with a shudder. Great heavens! the thing was unfinished. It had but one eyebrow. I had not noticed it before; but now I saw and I understood. It had come to me to be completed. It would follow me until I had finished what I had begun. I could have caught it now, but I would not. I resolved to have no more to do with it; and I went down to my late dinner, carefully closing the door that it might not follow me there.

All the evening it hovered near me, but I would not look toward it, and at last I went to bed, glancing over my shoulder at the shadowy globe following me as I came up the stairs. I locked my door, undressed, and went to bed, but for a time I could not sleep. At length I fell into a light doze, but was soon awakened by a consciousness that something was in the room. I had forgotten to close the transom and I could dimly see the pale shape of the haunted balloon now directly over my head. I hid my face beneath the bedclothes when crack! came a loud report close to my ear, and I peeped out to find that the shape was gone. Cautiously I felt about upon my pillow and my fingers touched something warm and sticky. I hurriedly lit the gas and looked. There was nothing to be seen but a smear of blood-red paint upon the pillow and besides that a shriveled bit of rubber. My imagination? Not a bit of it. The thing was of the devil. Don't tell me that there was nothing strange about it. I tell you that the paint was warm, like blood, and the rubber smelled of brimstone.

MEXICAN MESCAL.

A Tipple of Lowly Origin But a Head Spinner All the Same.

The humble but inspiring mescal is derived from such imposing scientific terms as the aguave Americano, maguey and American aloe. In his report to Agricultural Secretary Rusk, Special Agent Poston, says the plant is a species of the numerous family of cacti indigenous to Arizona, Southern California, Texas, New Mexico and Mexico. The Aztecs, when found by the Spaniards, used the plant for cordage, matting brooms, brushes, shoes, bedding and various domestic purposes. They roasted the pulp for food and fermented the juice into "pulque." The latter has into that strong but not repulsive drink called mescal. The maguey plant matures in seven years, becoming cabbage-headed in shape, with prickly guards. It weighs from twenty-five to fifty pounds. The various layers, as ted by the natives, are nutritious and purgative. The pulp is fermented in a rawhide vat. The City of Mexico drinks 250,000 pints of pulque daily, or a pint per capita, which ratio prevails generally throughout Mexico, pulque being the national beverage, like wine in France, beer in Germany or "budge" in Yankeedom. Mescal flowers make excellent honey. Deer and antelope seek them eagerly. The stalk of the plant grows twelve to twenty feet high, and is used in Mexican domestic architecture. Mescal distilleries are very simple and more secret than any moonshiner's still. Maguey has been immemorially cultivated in old Mexico, but is not raised north of the line. In Arizona for twenty-five years past mescal has averaged $2.50 per gallon new, with $1 added for each year of maturity. A higher grade article is called tequile, and is worth over $10 per gal-

She Was Surprised.

An amusing story is told of a well known Russian woman who went recently to enjoy the sulphur baths at Tiflis. On a particular morning the countess entered, as assual, one of the bathrooms. The water had hardly touched her body, however, when, to her horror, she began to turn black. She was so frightened at the transformation that, upon seeing her reflection in the mirror, she fainted. The attendant, who was as greatly startled as her mistress, cried for help. The explanation was simple enough. It was discovered that the countess was accustomed to paint her face, hands, arms and neck daily with a substance containing zinc. On that fatal day the poor woman had neglected to remove the "beautifying" coat. The zinc combined with the sulphur and natrium of the water, and quickly made an African belle out of the white-skinned bather. A considerable time passed before the unfortunate woman resumed her natural appearance.—New York

SHE BELONGS IN THE HAREM OF A DESPOTIC RULER.

Something About the Women in a Algerian Harem—Superb Faces and Gorgoous Costumes-A Street Scene in the City of Algiera.

The position of the Arab woman in Algiers is far superior to that of her sex in Turkey, and the French law, which is rigidly enforced, prevents her being sold into slavery. She is, how-ever, "the victim of a brutalizing so-cial code, founded on and wound up in a religion whose theory is pure but whose practice is barbarous.

When a child is born to a Moorish woman she considers it a blessing if it be a boy, a curse if a girl, and directly the girl comes into the world she is beptized in the name of Fathma, which is the name of the mother of the prophet. However, to our eyes it really was a beautiful sight, for there is nothing in the world more lovely than a beautiful woman—and we had a good chance to judge of these young women's appearance—they not only threw off their veils and folded their burnouses, but they also took off their shoes and short stockings, displaying their bare ankles heavily bangled with silver and gold ornaments, fine enough to turn a col-lector of such antiquities green with

LIVED OVER A CENTURY.

Grandpa Brooks, of Michigan, Is Over 105 Years Old.

John Brooks, of Waldron, Mich., recently celebrated the 105th anniversary of his birth. Mr. Brooks was born at Hancock, N. H., June 17, 1786. He is thought of his life were spent with his fatheron the farm. His education was only such as the average farmer boy of that day received—a few months in winter at the log school house. His parents were strictly Christian, and he was trained in all the rigidity of the Puritan doctrines. Tobacco he never used in any form and an oath was never heard to escape his lips. The worst language he remembers using was when he charged a cow with being possessed with the devil, and he has always regreted that he did not speak of her instead as a bad cow, which he thinks would have answered just as well. Shortly before the war of 1812 Mr. Brooks left the farm and at the village of Milford in the same State, engaged as an apprentice in the blacksmith shop of an older brother. Near the close of the war his brother was drafted, and to obey the summons must leave a dependent family. Young Brooks, who was still single, promptly offered to go as substitute. Enlisting, he served for three months in the capacity of cook, and the war having closed was honorably discharged. He has forgotten his company and the number of his regiment, but remembers Col. John Steele as the commander. He returned to Hancock, where two years later he was united in marriage to Miss Deidamia Brooks, of that village. The venerable wife died in 1869. From this union came nine children, five of whom, three sons and two daughters, are now living; John at Lickley's Corners, William at Reed City, James at Walaron, Deidamia at Jackson, and Charlotte at Harrison. Soon after his marriage Brooks emigrated to Unadilla, N. Y. There, after a few years at farming, he resolved to come still farther west, and again fixing up his emigrant wagon pushed out. He was headed for northern Ohio or southern Michigan, but meeting at Cattaraugus a returning party from the west he was so discouraged by their report of the country that he settled at Cattaraugus and remained for twenty years, while in a sawmill. In 1843 he put into execution his resolve to come to Michigan, settling in Pittsford township, where he worked a farm for twenty eight years and then removed in 1871 to the homestead in Wright township, where he now resides with his son James. Five years ago his 100th birthday was publicly celebrated in a grove near his home, where there were over

The wrongs of ex-Queen Natalie, of Servia, have roused the sympathy of the entire world for the unfortunate ady, who is still the pride of the Serv-called the "Pearl of the Orient," and no more popular sovereign reigned in Europe. Her differences with Milan were created by her royal husband's infidelity and brutality, and when the unfortunate lady sought a legal separation from Milan and the establishment of a regency until the Alexander, she had little idea of the trouble and persecution to which she would be subjected. Tools of Milan constantly surrounded the boy and poisoned his mind against his mother. When Natalie sent a written remonstrance to the Skuptschina, that body refused to read it. The brave ex-queen persisted in her attempts to be reunited to her son, whom she was not permitted to see, and was finally ordered by the Servian authorities to quit Servian territory and upon her refusal they made an attempt to remove her by force. She was compelled to enter a carriage and was being rapidly driven day toward the frontier, when the students of the university were informed of the fact. They rallied to her defense, routed the officers and conveyed Natalie back to her own house, which they guarded, gallantly repulsing the police and the military who attempted to effect an entrance. Our portrait of this brave and noble lady is from L'Illustration, and is the only authentic one ever published in this country.

While to a certain extent the soldiers of the war of the rebellion had experience in common, the survivors find upon comparing notes more than a quarter of a century after the war closed that their lines frequently diverted in a far greater degree than they at that time even dreamed of. Hence the recollections of years agone, of the camp fire, the march and bivouac, which had been securely hidden away in memory's cloisters. are of profound interest to both soldier and civilian.

In March, 1865, while the writer had command of a fort on Grant's line of defenses at City Point, he was awakened one day, at all events, to a vivid realization of the horrors and vicissituaes of war.

One Sunday morning the boys had formed alignment in their respective company streets for the usual o'clock inspection.

weather was delightful. The sun shone brightly, and the temperature was that of a morning in May. Every boy in blue seemed to possess an intuition respecting an early closing of the dreadful four years' war, and every heart beat high with the anticipations born of a return to the homes and friends in the North. How quickly the transformation came can scarcely yet be realized by the actors in one of the closing scenes of the great war drama.

Scarcely had the inspection begun, however, ere a mounted orderly dashed up to the head of each company street, handed dispatches to each company commander, and was off again like a shot. Then came the ominous order: Unsling knapsacks, and run for the fort!" There was apparently no time to be lost; knapsacks were unslung and tossed into the tents of the owners, and a grand scurrying for the various forts along Nearer they came until the fez, scarlet trousers and white leggings of the zouave uniform bespoke the One Hundred and Fourteenth Pennsylvania. Major Irvine did not intend, neither did the writer intend. to convey the idea that Pickett's division alone contained that number of troops, although the types conveyed that impression. The writer did intend to convey the idea that there was that number, or nearly so, put in. and offers the following reasons for doing so: Appleton's enclyclopedia. in the article on 'The Battle of Gettysburg," puts the charging column at 18,000 men, exclusive of Wilcox's who did not fairly advance. General Longstreet, who commanded the line from which the charge was made, says in the Century magazine, February, 1887, that General Lee told him to take Pickett's division and make the attack, and that he would reinforce him with two divisions of the third corps and that this would make 15.000 men. Gen. Longstreet said that he told Gen. Lee that there never was a body of 15,000 men who could make that attack successfully. However, he formed the two divisions on Pickett's left, with orders to take up the line of march as Pickett passed before them in short echelon. That these two divisions were "in it" is proven by Longstreet's remark later to Col. Freemauth, of the English army. who was a spectator. He called his attention to their wavering condition and said that they would not hold; that Pickett would strike and be crushed, and that the attack would be a failure. Col. Alexander, who commanded the Confederate artillery in this action, in his article on Pickett's charge (vide Century magazine, Jan. 1887,) speaks of Pet igrew's brigade commanded by Fry, as being the brigade of direction for the whole force. and that he adjoined Garnett on the left, and that Pettigrew's brigade was a heavy loser in officers and men is a matter of history. All this to simply show that in that famous charge more than Armistead's. Garnett's and Kemper's brigades were engaged, and from such sources as should command respect.

It is not the desire of Grit in any manner to belittle the achievements of either party in the late war. It welcomes Confederate veterans to the 'Chat," guaranteeing them fair treatment from all concerned. It's the "facts in the case" Grit is after, and will welcome them from any sour and publish them with "malice toward none."-Pennsylvania Grit.

A Morrible Death.

One of Atlanta's society women tells the following sad story in the Atlanta Constitution:

"I was living in Augusta at the time of the war, and had a very dear friend leave for Florida in his company. The day for the departure came, and all the young ladies went down on Broad street to see the soldiers in gray take their leave. When the company reached the place where I was standing, my friend took off his hat and gave me a smile. The sunlight touched his hair, and I thought a little sadly, that I had never seen so fine a picture of manhood. Well, the days went by swiftly, eventfully, and one day the news came to me that my friend was dead, but he had not died on the battle-field as a soldier, but by the bite of a poisonous snake.

"In the same company was a young physician whom the boys called the 'snake charmer,' for often he would have them in his pockets, in his hat or around his waist, with no fear that they would injure him. One day my friend, who had often seen the doctor handle the snakes without disaster. found a small green serpent in his tent, and immediately proceeded to catch it and play with it. Despite the repeated importuning of his comrades to put it down, he let the snake sting him on the hard, and deeming it of no consequence, he extracted the poisonfrom thebite with his mouth, and laughingly went to sleep, thinking no more about the matter. The Dix family, of New York, have in their possession a flag which has a history of real live interest. This flag was on exhibition at headquarters of the Memorial Committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in the Brooklyn City Hall, and was loaned to Dix Post to be carried at their head on Memorial Day. It isn't much of a flag to look at, being rather small, very dirty, and well worn, but to this place I hurried. Items of Interest. A new kind of beer, made of the ex tract of rice, has a very peculiar effect. Sometimes a week elapses after drinking it before it causes any exhilaration. Then its fuddling quality is unmistakably shown and is said to be quite staggering. It is recommended as very useful to travelers who have to make a long stay at prohibition towns. A Benedict at Atlanta, desiring to have a grand carouse a few days before his marriage, and then reform, saturated himself with rice beer. The effect was disap-pointing, for he exhibited no signs of hilarity until his wedding-day, and then he was so extremely jolly that he had to be restrained by his friends during the ceremony.

August Flower"

What is It For?

This is the query perpetually on your little boy's lips. And he is no worse than the bigger, older, balder-head-ed boys. Life is an interrogation point. "What is it for?" we continually cry from the cradle to the grave. So with this little introductory sermon we turn and ask: "What is AUGUST FLOWER FOR?" As easily answered as asked: It is for Dyspepsia. It is a special remedy for the Stomach and Liver. Nothing more than this; but this brimful. We believe August Flower cures Dyspepsia. We know it will. We have reasons for knowing it. Twenty years ago it started in a small country town. To-day it has an honored place in every city and country store, possesses one of the largest manufacturing plants in the country and sells everywhere. Why is this? The reason is as simple as a child's thought. It is honest, does one thing, and does it right along-it cures Dyspepsia. G. G. GREEN, Sole Man'fr, Woodbury, N.J.

THE FARM AND HOME. INFORMATION ABOUT THE RED

POLLED CATTLE. There Are Many Points in Their Favor-Miscellaneous Notes on the Hen-nery, the Dairy, the Farm and the Household.

J. M. Chase, in the Michigan Farmer, presents some of the merits of this breed. He says: I have received a good many letters asking about the Red Polls, their history and their good qualities. I thought a short article telling something about them would not be amiss. The Red Polled cattle originated in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk in England. So far back as can be traced, there existed in those counties a breed of polled cattle renowned for their hardiness and excellent milking qualities. During the last half century, a number of enterprising men of that section have taken a special interest in the improvement of this breed, and we have as the result the pure bred Red Poll of the present day. These animals are usually of a rich red color, sometimes a shade lighter, of medium size, small bones, good form and particularly clean and stylish about the head and neck. The cows are frequently very plump and straight when dry, but when giving milk become lank and less pleasing to the eye of any but the dairyman. In size they are classed as medium, but individually they differ much in this respect. Some of the heaviest milking cows of the breed are but little larger than the average Jersey, while others equal the weight of large Shorthorns, hence it is within the power of the breeder, by selection and care in breeding, to form a herd of the size he may prefer. With few exceptions the cows have good udders, with good sized teats, the latter being particularly noticeable in comparison with some of the popular milking breeds. The milk

Fear of spoiling (?) is the great bugbear raised by certain men who put off all thought of education until the colt is four or five years old, writes an experienced horse breeder. Fear of weak constitutions is the reason given for letting the colts warm themselves on manure piles and live on straw, because of which hundreds of colts will' go to pasture in the spring in poorer condition than they are to-day and without having made any growth. Is it any wonder that such men complain that horse-breeding doesn't pay? The first year of the colt's life should be fruitful of instruction. The colt will learn more easily when six months old than when a year old. It can also be controlled more easily. Hence it is wise to handle the colt early. Its early training should not stop with breaking to halter. It should be handled until any part of its limbs can be rubbed; until it is accustomed to the bridle, and until it will drive as well as lead. To teach it all this and to keep it from forgetting what it has learned is a little trouble, but if the colt is of good stock the trouble is well paid for. Practice a little common sense with the young stock, and note the high rate of interest coming back to you as the result of the investments. - American Trotter.

More Mutton and Less Pork. Dr. Galen Wilson says the flesh of the sheep offers greater immunity from disease and filth than that of any other animal. They do not thrive in the mire, nor wallow in the trough they feed from. They consume neither garbage, vermin, decaying meats, nor rotten vegetables. Their flesh has never been known to impart scrofula or trichinæ to those who eat it. The sheep is a dainty feeder, and cleanly in all its habits; it cannot subsist on filth, nor can it long survive within its environment. They are of course subject to disease, but, unlike cattle, hogs and fowls, they give ocular evidence of their ailment, and that they are unfit to slaughter for human food, almost as soon as attacked. Mutton is wholesome, nutritious, and easily digested, and those who partake of it may have reasonable assurance that it is clean and free from the germs of diseases. More mutton and less pork on our tables would be best for both the producer and consumer. We are making some progress in this direction, but there is yet room for more.

The Indigestible Stuff.

Experiments made by the New York Dairy commission show that oleomargarine will not dissolve and liquefy in any human stomach in its natural and ordinary temperature. It is indigestible, and to the support of the New York commissioners on this point of indigestibility come the findings of the French commission and other scientific bodies, and not only is this true, but every reading, thinking, intelligent person knows it. The misfortune is that the glare and glitter of the color, the manufacture, consistency and general make up of the fraud is such as to capture the eye of the unwary and the ignorant who buy it almost invariably for butter, for the best creamery butter, and not only cat it themselves but give it to their children. Here is where disease and death come in, and the ignorant poor are the sufferers. It is a shame on our civili-

If you like you may also add the giblets to it, sprinkled with salt. The inside of poultry after being drawn, ought always to be rubbed with some salt.

Dainty Dairying.

The thick "clouted" cream is easily sold if put up in cheap tumblers covered with parchment paper labels, neatly cut and gummed on the edge of the glass. My way of marking the labels was with a brass stencil plate, a brush and red or blue ink, made by thickening a solution of diamond dye with starch. A fancy border around the name and brand, made in a complimentary color, will add to the effect. It was said by a writer of 2,000 years ago that the farmer who studies the markets will increase in prosperity.

Cream is a great delicacy and a most valuable nutrient; its fat goes directly into the blood without change by any digestive process, and hence it is not productive of nausea or indigestion to the dyspeptic. And hence, too, its perfect purity is imperative. Cream brings a much higher price than milk, more money than butter, and is easily salable in towns, and even in villages. I sold a large quantity of it in strawberry season for 50 cents a quart, when butter brought only 85 cents, and a quart of thick cream will make only one pound of butter.

Dairymen able to prepare their goods in an attractive manner will find customers in even small villages, where others cannot make sales. The appearance pleases, and when the quality is found as good as the looks the market becomes permanent. A cake of good butter, wrapped in fresh parchment paper, with a bright trademark and the owner's name upon it, will bring 5 cents more for the half-pound or the pound than a chunk of the same make cut out of a tub. I found a red ribbon tied around the wrapper helped to sell every cake so wrapped before one of the same lot not so wrapped was disposed of. The expert nowadays does not ask the court and jury to accept his private opinion as to the genuineness of a signature, but produces such proofs of the reasons which have made him reach the conclusion by means of diagrams, photographs, etc., as to leave no doubt in their minds.

> Every person," said D. T. Aims, the famous handwriting expert, the other day, "has peculiar characteristics, and no two hand writings are exactly alike. Personalities enter as much into a man's penmanship as in his daily intercourse with friends or acquaintances. The forger, for instance, can not know his own habits or control his own hand so as to set it aside entirely at will. Mere will power can have little effect on the formation of letters, and even, although he may try, the skillful forger cannot wholly hide his own individuality. Forgeries are more frequently onfined to a single signature.

> The forger has the advantage of having before him a copy upon which he may practice until he has attained enough skill to reproduce it, or he may make use of the various mechanical means for securing a correct outline by which he will be guided in reproducing his copy. Where the former method is employed there is usually a fatal lack of accuracy as to form. The other method usually leaves signs of the slow and hesitating movement required for carefully following an outline, also several retouches of the shaded lines, which when examined under a microscope are at once apparent. Forgeries thus made may generally be demonstrated from the very character of the work without any reference whatever to the general signature.

A Boon to Boys. The manufacture of artificial grindtones now constitutes a very important industry in this country. The materials used in this manufacture are pulverized quartz, powered flint, powdered emery or corundum and rubber dissolved by a suitable solvent. These materials, after being carefully mixed together, form a substance that is exceedingly durable, and that will, when used for sharpening tools outwear by many years any natural stone known. During the process of mixing and kneading there is a constant escape of tar fumes, very often rendering necessary the covering of the mixers with a sheet-iron hood. The compound is afterward calendered into sheets of one-half to three inches thick, shaped up and carefully vulcanized, and the process is completed by the wheels being trued up with tools made especially for the purpose. These wheels are used for the finest sort of grinding and polishing purposes.

The hand of time deals lightly with a woman in perfect health. But all functional derangements and disorders peculiar to women leave their mark. You needn't have them. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to your rescue as no other medicine can. It cures them. For periodical pains, prolapsus and other displacements, bearingdown sensations, and all "female complaints" and weaknesses, it is a positive remedy. It is a powerful, restorative tonic and nervine, imparting strength to the whole system in general, and to the uterine organs and appendages in particular. It keeps years from your face and figure—but adds years to your life. It's guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case. If it doesn't, your money is returned.

Monday afternoon a German rushed into the coroner's office and begged the coroner to send at once to 299 Mohawk street. When Deputy Coroner Clement arrived at the house he found a funeral in progress over the remains of little Annie Arnold, who died Sunday. The man who gave the information said that something was wrong. The funeral was stopped, and Mrs. Arnold gave an explanation. Little Annie had die · Sunday, and Dr. Ulrich, who attended her, issued a certificate of death from meningitis. This did not satisfy Mrs. Arnold. When the doctor was first called she said he pronounced the case to be typhoid fever. The next day it was scarlet fever. He again changed his mind, she says, and said it was from meningitis. The funeral was proceeded with and a jury sworn io. The case was then postponed until Saturday. From the story of several of the naighbors it would seem that the child was hurt from falling dawn stairs.

A sad story of destitution came to the notice of Chief Matron Stannard of the Des Plaines Street Station Wednesday evening in the case of Mrs. Mary Hanley, who lives at 938 Mitchell avenue, and whose little girls were found on the street begging. Mrs. Hanley is the daughter of a respectable contractor of Burlington. Ia. Several years ago, while living in Burlington, her husband died, leaving her and three children without support. A year ago a doctor located in Burlington and persuaded the woman to marry him. They lived happily until last September. At that time the doctor thought he could better his condition by locating in Chicago, and easily induced his wife to accompany him here. The family reached the Polk treet depot Sept. 30. Hanley left his wife and three children in the waiting-room of the depot and went out ostensibly or a cab and to look after their baggage. He never retarned. Mrs. Hanley supported herself by washing until taken sick and then was aided by two young women from the Daniels Waifs' Mission. They have now left the city, and the entire support of the woman is the earnings of her son, 13 years old, who receives $2 a week. Yesterday Mrs. Hanley, driven to desperation by her poverty sent her three little. tion by her poverty, sent her three little girls, aged 7, 9 and 11 years, out on the street to beg. Matron Stannard gave the children car fare and money to help them until to-day and sent them home.

The pictures of Washington in his old age seem to caricature the lower part of his face. Even that magnificent portrait of Stuart's, which hangs in the East Room of the White House, pictures the mouth and chin as if, when the great General sat for the artist, he had just put in each cheek a fresh supply of that comfort which is contraband to habits of cleanliness and good taste. The truth about this expression in these likenesses of Washington is, that at a late period in life he was obliged to use false teeth, and in those carly days the science of dentistry was yet in its incipiency and the dentist who accommodated Washington, did as best he could. The result was a complete mal-adaption of the artificial denture, as well as an abnormal conformation of a once noble face. If, as the saying goes that "the face is the mirror of the soul," why not, kind reader, if you are obliged to wear artificial teeth, do you not request that the preservation of your natural features be retained? When you call at Dr. Cigrand's Dental Office, at corner North and Milwaukee avenues. for artificial teeth, please bring with you a photograph of yourself showing how you appeared before you lost the pearls of your mouth. The doctor makes a specialty of difficult operations, and we kindly ask our readers to give him a call and hear his reasonable terms for first-class dental work

BOWMANVILLE.

Citizens of Bowmanville and Ravenswood will miss their old mail carrier after to-day. So regular was the old man in making his rounds four times a day that the people used to set their clocks by him. Every housewife on the road knew his footstep, and no one was more cordially welcomed than be.

In a fit of jealous passion last evening Fred Stieneman who lived at the corner of Tuttle avenue and Commercial street, in R venswood, near l'owmanville, shot and fatally wounded his wife and then blew his happy existence for a long time. Steine-man, who was seventeen years his wife's senior, was ensanely jealous of her. Recently he formed the suspicion that a grocer's delivery clerk named Barns, who made daily visits to the home at the corner of Tuttle avenue and Commercial street, was too friendly with Mrs. Steineman, and this furnished an excuse for a dozen violent quarries. Steineman, who was an iron molder, was taken ill with the grip early in the spring, and the disease reduced him to such a low physical condition that he was un able to resume work. He brooded a great deal over his troubles, quarreled with his wife and even his neighbors, and made himself generally disagreeable. Barn , the of anxiety and trouble, and whenever he happined to think about that young man able to control it, and at such times he usually turned it loose at Mrs. Steineman. One night about a week ago, during a one night about a week ago, during a quarrel that was figreer than any other in which the couple had ever eng ged. Steineman drew a revolver on his wife and fired three shots at her, but the bullets flew wide of his aim and the woman escaped injury. The police, who heard of the shooting. made an investigation the following day, but neither the man nor the woman was inclined to say snything about it, so the but neither the man nor the woman was inclined to say snything about it, so the matter was dropped. Steineman, accompanied by J. J. Boyle, a painter, who lives in East Ravenswood Fark returned home about 5:30 o'clock last evening. Steineman was in surly mood and the moment he met his wife he began abusing her. He renewed his old suspicions about Barnes, and commanded that the grocer's clerk never enter the honse again. Mrs. Steineman, who is a large and rather handsome woman, angered at her husband's words retorted rather sharply to some of his charges and finally wound up by telling him that he ought to go to work. Steineman, whose eyes were blazing with fury, sprang at his wifa, caught her by the throat and tried to choke her, but she broke away from him and ran into another room. The infurate husband followed her, and, drawing a big revolver from his pocket, he leveled it and fired. The bullet entered Mrs. Steineman's breast but did not disable her for the moment. She turned and tried to run from the man into the street, but just as she reached the door the revolver flashed again and another bullet fore through her body. This time she was hit in the back. Seriously wounded she fell to the floor in a swoon and then Steineman coolly placed the muzzle of the revolver against his own head and blew his brains out.
