MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Mrs. Bertha Kruger Kills Mother and Self.

THE HUSBAND WOUNDED.

Tragedy Enacted One and a-half Miles North of Long Grove.

"Margaret Voss came to her death at the hands of her daughter, Mrs. Bertha Kruger, and that Mrs. Bertha Kruger met death at her own hands while temporarily insane," was the verdict of the jury in one of the most horrible tragedies that ever disgraced the annals of Lake county. The crime occurred one and one-half miles north of Long Grove and five miles east of Lake Zurich last Sunday afternoon and as a result Mrs. Voss and her daughter, Mrs. Bertha Kruger, met death at the home where they have lived for years. The husband and son is at the home of his parents, a few miles west of the scene of the horrible crime, with a bullet-hole through his left arm.

Excitement in the community never was at such a high pitch and the residents in the vicinity of the shooting speak in low tones of the awful crime that was committed at their doors. Crowds of people from miles around gathered at the old homestead to view the scene of the tragedy and take a last look at the principals in the affair. The shooting occurred at 4:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Mr. Kruger, who returned home shortly before the shooting from a visit to his brother, related the following story before the coroner's jury.

"Sunday afternoon directly after dinner I went over to my brother's, returning about 4 o'clock. As I came into the yard my mother-in-law asked me to repair one of her shoes, which needed mending, and I entered the barn with it, fixing the same as she desired. She sat upon the rear steps of the house and when I came out with the shoe she went into the house. I went after blackberries and when I came back entered at the rear kitchen door. No sooner was I inside the room than my wife stepped through the dining room door (scarcely ten feet away) and fired point blank at me, the bullet striking my suspender buckle and glanced, striking my left arm. Seeing that I did not fall, she fired twice more at me and I turned and ran from the house to the home of my nearest neighbor, Charles LaFrantz. Going over I heard another shot, undoubtedly the one that killed Mrs. Voss. Mr. LaFrantz immediately hitched up his team and while he was hitching the last horse to the wagon, another report was heard. We started for my father's, taking with us my little boy, who with his sister was playing at Mr. LaFrantz's. We met my hired man, Augustus Pohlman, and his brother. I told him I was shot and that there was shooting over at the house. Pohlman said: 'You had better go to a doctor. I'll go and hitch up and take you.' I told him he had better not go over there, but they went."

Other witnesses were sworn, and according to their stories Pohlman went to the barn and shortly afterwards cautiously entered the house. On entering the dining room door he gave a sudden start, for the first thing that met his gaze was the body of Mrs. Voss lying in a pool of blood with a bullet hole in the back of the head. On the opposite side of the room Mrs. Kruger, the insane perpetrator of the worst crime that was ever committed in this section, was lying face downward with a .38-calibre revolver of a cheap pattern clinched tightly in her hand. Her face was burned with powder and a bullet plowed a hole through her head from front to back. The sight was galling to behold. Pohlman ran to Henry Kruger's, about a mile away, and spread the alarm.

Coroner Knight was at once summoned and arrived at 11 o'clock that night. He at once impaneled a jury and the verdict was rendered as above. The doors were locked by some of the neighbors and no one allowed in the house until after the coroner had released the bodies.

Both families are well-known throughout the community. They are well-to-do people and the farm on which the murder and suicide took place is one of the best in this part of the state.

The family did not live happily together, which fact developed at the inquest, but it is not known whether the husband and wife quarrelled on that day or not. It is reported that Mr. Kruger said he was going to sell out this coming fall and leave. It is said that the dead woman remarked she would leave the next week if she could and many other conflicting rumors are current. The trouble, as near as we can learn, began at the death of Christopher Voss, which occurred about five years ago, when he left his wife a life lease of the farm, which was to go at her death to her daughter—Mrs. Kruger—and children.

The funeral services over the remains of the mother and daughter were held at their late home Monday and the remains were laid side by side in the Fairfield cemetery.

Gets A Line to Fox Lake.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad company has discontinued its suburban service north of its Evanston station at Davis street. This was by agreement with the Chicago & Milwaukee Electric Railway company, which may complete its line from Milwaukee to Evanston in the near future.

It now develops that the Cook, Lake and McHenry Counties railroad, of which Leslie Carter is president, and James Waller treasurer, is one and the same with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul. As a charter was granted the first line to build a road from Libertyville to Fox Lake, this means that the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul will have a line of its own from Chicago to Fox Lake shortly.

The Chicago & Milwaukee will transfer passengers from north of Evanston to the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul at Evanston and may enter the city at the same rate as formerly. President Miller, of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, says that there is no special significance in the change. It is merely desired, he says, to provide better service for the district south of Davis street, and he thinks the connection of Milwaukee and Chicago by an electric line is in the dim and distant future.

Her Life Work Done.

Mrs. Hannah Kampert, (nee Lageschulte), wife of Fred Kampert, died at her home on Main street, Barrington at 12 o'clock Sunday, after a lingering illness. She bore the long days of suffering with christian-like patience and died with perfect trust in the goodness of God.

Mrs. Kampert was born in Barrington on March 28, 1856, and has always made her home in this vicinity.

On June 16, 1877, she was united in marriage to Fred Kampert. This union was blessed with four children, one son and three daughters, all of whom survive her. She also leaves to mourn her loss a husband, two brothers and a mother, aged 85 years.

Mrs. Kampert was a devoted member of the Salem Evangelical church. She was a true mother and wife, so careful for the welfare of her family that she forgot herself and her needs in caring for them.

The funeral services were held at the Salem Evangelical church Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock. Rev. A. Strickfaden officiating. Interment in Evergreen cemetery.

CORRESPONDENTS PROTEST.

Newspaper Men Complain of the Censorship at Manila.

GRAVE CHARGES ARE MADE.

Statement Signed by All the Newspaper Men in the Philippines Says Misleading Information Has Been Sent to the United States.

The constantly increasing strictness of the censorship of press dispatches from Manila resulted in a united effort on the part of correspondents there to secure an abatement of the rigor of the censorship.

All the correspondents in the islands signed a "round robin" addressed to Gen. Otis, requesting him to moderate the rigor of the censorship. The document, in effect, charged that misleading information was sent to the war department as to the situation in the Philippines, especially in regard to the assumption that the insurrection can be speedily ended without a greatly increased force. The statement concluded: "We think the tenacity of the Filipino purpose has been underestimated and that the statements are unfounded that volunteers are willing to engage in further service."

After a long conference Gen. Otis refused to allow the statement to be sent from Manila, and a representative of the correspondents cabled it from Hongkong.

Gen. Otis finally promised greater liberality, agreeing to pass all matter that he might consider not detrimental to the interests of the United States.

GATES ARE NOW OPEN

First Greater America Colonial Exposition Opens with Elaborate Ceremonies.

IS BETTER THAN LAST YEAR?

Enthusiastic Crowds Testify to Success of the Big Show and Praise Omaha Enterprise—Many Attractions and More Are Constantly Being Added.

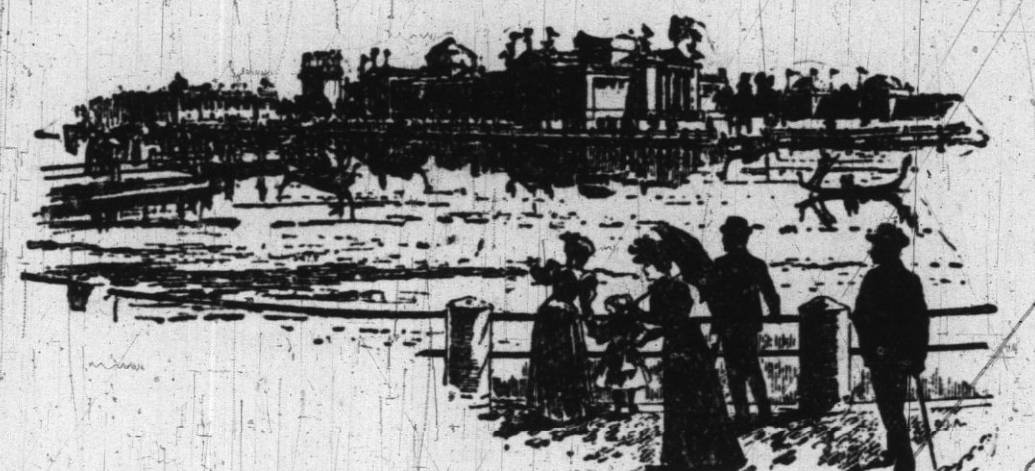

Promptly on time the gates of the First Greater America Colonial Exposition were opened on the morning of July 1, and the last great educational enterprise of the 19th century is now well under way, its beautiful grounds and magnificent buildings thronged with crowds of visitors, who are surprised and pleased to find their expectations more than realized. The buildings and grounds are complete and the principal exhibits already in place. A large force of men, working day and night, are rapidly bringing order out of chaos and a few days will serve to put all the splendid displays in position.

The grounds cover about two hundred acres and are arranged in four sections, or divisions. The most important section is the Grand Court of Honor, where the principal buildings are grouped around the lagoon. East of the Court lies the Bluff Tract, the also be found the agricultural exhibit, which promises to surpass anything of the kind ever seen in the West.

The principal buildings have been changed but little except to improve here and there, and to brighten up and add a few finishing touches to exteriors. More important changes have been made in the landscape gardening. The general plan followed last year has not been changed but it has been added to and vastly improved. About the Court of Honor sections of the brick walks have been removed and a number of small gardens relieve the eye and increase the pleasing effect of the whole. Tropical plants and flowers will give a brilliant touch of color to the scene and supply the necessary contrast to the white and stately buildings and the reaches of green sward. In the center of the court the clear waters of the lagoon give back to view the fairy picture, while the fountain flashes in the sunlight and gaily decorated water-craft glide here and there.

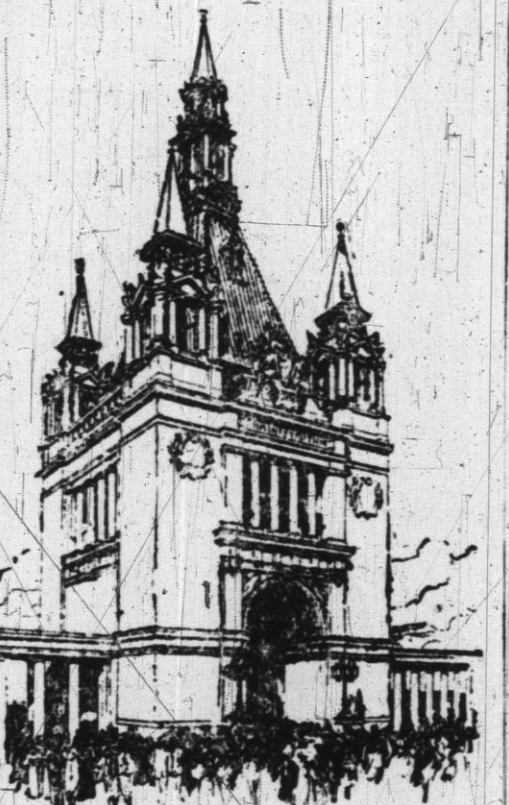

Rudolph Ulrich, the well-known landscape artist, has been at work on the grounds nearly 3 months now, having a large force of men in his department. During May he had more than one hundred men employed, and in June that number was more than doubled, as several car-loads of trees, plants, and shrubbery from California, Florida, Louisiana, and Hawaii, are now arriving, and many men will be needed to take care of this stuff and place it in the ground. Many of these will be strictly native plants, and very valuable and rare in this latitude, some of which have never been seen southern part of which is arranged as a park, with stretches of green sward, avenues of shade trees, and plats of flowering plants and shrubs. In this tract stands the Horticultural Building, given over to the display of fruits and flowers, and in front of which is a large aquatic basin almost filled with water-lilies and other blooming plants. Within the building will be a magnificent display of tropic and sub-tropical plants, trees, vines, and fruits. Stately palms, orange trees and all the

In addition to the plants already on the grounds there has been over 250,000 new plants set out this year. The palm and oleander features will be conspicuous, as it is intended to have a wonderful collection of these among others. In addition to the trees on the grounds last year, nearly two thousand new ones have been set out, making the Grand Court and other parts of the grounds, green, cool, and shady, as well as adding greatly to the general effect. A race-track, half-mile, has been made, which is very neat and attractive.

The world-famed British Grenadier Band, generally known as Godfrey's British Military Band, give daily concerts for five weeks. From Omaha it goes to San Francisco and from there to Australia. A WEEK IN ILLINOIS.

RECORD OF HAPPENINGS FOR SEVEN DAYS.

Officer Who Allowed a Federal Prisoner to Escape Is to Be Put on Trial at Kankakee—Pardon Board's Reason for Not Paroling Spalding.

Sheriff Held in Hennig Case.

Kankakee, Ill.—Matthew Coulson, sheriff of LaSalle county, waived examination before United States Commissioner Hanna here and was bound over in the sum of $2,000 to the federal grand jury, which will meet in Chicago next October. The charge against him was permitting the escape, or what amounted to the same thing in law, granting practical immunity from imprisonment to William R. Hennig, the ex-bucketshop man of Chicago. Hennig was sentenced to nine months in the Ottawa jail for using the United States mails fraudulently. Since he was sent to Ottawa seven months ago, in the absence of any restraint of his person, he has been having an agreeable time. As a "trusty" he has been allowed the freedom of the town, being merely required to report to the jail three times a day. Learning of this the United States officers of Chicago investigated and last midnight arrested Sheriff Coulson. Ex-Attorney-General Maloney, present mayor of Ottawa, James A. Garry, a capitalist, and ex-Mayor Lewis Hess, who can unitedly schedule $500,000 worth of property, went on Coulson's bond. "Everybody approves of the humane course Sheriff Coulson has taken with Hennig," said Mr. Hess.

Spalding to Stay in Prison.

Springfield, Ill.—The board of pardons continued the application of Chas. W. Spalding for parole for one year. E. A. Snively, the resident member of the board, said in regard to the matter:

"The action of the board means that Spalding will be retained in prison for another year. When the board has continued a case for a certain time it is not its practice again to consider a case until the expiration of the period named. In arriving at a conclusion the board merely applied the same rules to the Spalding case that it does to all others. He is a prisoner under the parole law, a statute which provides for the punishment as well as the reformation of criminals. One of the purposes of punishment is to deter others from committing crimes, and the board did not feel that this or the other features of the law had been fulfilled by one year's imprisonment."

Miners May Attack Troops.

Carterville, Ill., telegram: The mining situation in this city is strained owing to the recent firing on the troops stationed here. Later developments strongly point to a preconcerted plan to drive the troops from the position they have occupied and patrolled for several nights.

It is known that both contending parties, the men employed at the Brush mines and the strikers, are fully armed with modern guns and that both sides have received supplies in the last few days. The outlook is for a long drawn out contest, similar to the Pana troubles.

Ruling for Land Assessors.

Springfield, Ill., telegram: The attorney-general rendered an opinion in which he holds that "the owner of land cannot be assessed both on the land and on the lease of the same, nor upon notes given for rent when such notes are not due at the time of the assessment, April 1. The owner of the land is assessable for the value of the land, after deducting the value of the leasehold, and upon all rents or notes due at the time of the assessment or when the assessment should be made, and the lessee is assessable upon the value of the leasehold on the land."

Cars Plunge in Chicago River.

Chicago, telegram: Through the draw of the Northwestern railway bridge, near Kinzie street, a train of passenger cars plunged into the river at 9 o'clock today. The conductor and brakeman of the train saved their lives by jumping. Fortunately the train was an empty one and in the three cars which went over the bank and into the water there were no passengers. The train was being brought to the depot to carry an excursion of Swedish Methodists to Elgin. Twelve hundred passengers were waiting to go on board.

May Abolish All Passes.

Chicago, telegram: The executive officers of the lines in the western pass agreement are making strong efforts to abolish passes. A strong special committee has been appointed to round up the lines in the country and see what can be done to stop the issue of free passenger transportation. A similar movement was started last year, but too late in the year to do any good.

The Assembled Woman.

The International Council of Women in London was called "a gathering," but, judging by results, it was rather a scattering. Probably no such assemblage of representative women ever before met for consultation, but there have been assemblages of women which accomplished much more. The trouble was that the directors of the international affair tried to make their mission as large and as complicated as the meeting. They had something to say about everything. They had prepared papers on religion, art, science, philosophy, education, political economy, drama, cookery, dress reform, medicine, motherhood and mathematics. They reached out into all the spaces of thought, swept the whole horizon of the universe and burrowed down into the hidden mysteries of the human heart. Most of the philosophers and reformers of the other sex stood aghast at the comprehensive hurricane haste of the congress. But despite the oppressive sense of infinity that it awakened the congress manifested considerable more discretion than its many elements were in the habit of exercising in their separate coteries. Much of this was owing to the conservative way in which the presiding officer, Lady Aberdeen, kept her foot on the riotous feminine. She gave the keynote to the proceedings by announcing with incredible bravery that "this congress holds fast to the belief that woman's first mission must be her home." Many of the delegates felt a strong desire either to scream or to faint at this announcement, but the foot of Lady Aberdeen was firm, and she insisted upon holding the nose of the congress down to first principles, and it went along copiously, saying all kinds of things about all kinds of subjects, but treating man with considerably less acerbity than usual. Consequently, although the congress had no appreciable effect upon events and has not turned the course of destiny, it nevertheless betokened a larger sense of relativity and a kinder feeling toward oppressed man, who was virtually admitted to be a painful necessity.

One of the women writers who confine their knowledge entirely to their own sex has pointed out that some years ago ranch life was quite a fad with eastern women. They made a great point of going with their husbands into the far west, encountering dangers, riding bronchos, hunting jack rabbits and interviewing Indians, merely for the excitement, the change and the audacity of doing what men do. But the whole attractiveness of it has vanished. Our woman informant acknowledges neatly that her sex did not take to it kindly, but only pretended to in order to please the men. There is nothing strange in this. Woman is much less of a barbarian than man, even when man is in his best estate. It is very difficult to find a woman who at heart esteems it a luxury to sleep on the ground in wet clothes after the rattlesnakes have been thrashed out of the underbrush. Even Mrs. Custer and other women of her caliber who followed their husbands faithfully through all the ordeals of savage life never ceased to hanker after the luxuries, the social privileges and the tributes which society alone could furnish.

Somebody has yet to explain why it is that the giddy crowds of Americans who rush over the land in summer are greater vandals in small things than almost any people on the face of the earth. They invade private domains, they despoil graves and gardens, they chip off souvenirs from public monuments, and they disregard wholly all the rules which are made to preserve works of art for the benefit of the many. The gentle Rosalind, whose taper fingers would not maim a mosquito, does not hesitate to strip the brass letters from a tablet and put them in her reticule. The cry has gone up again this summer that the pilfering relic hunters are defacing our noblest monuments. This is not done in England or Germany or France, where the people themselves take a reverential pride in old landmarks and memorials. Can it be possible that our ruthless individuality comes out in this discouraging and barbaric way?

Novel Prize For Cabmen.

The citizens of the beautiful and lively city of Evanston, Ills., have been passing through a mortal conflict with the cabmen. In Evanston the cabman is a distinct institution. In some respects it may be said that he runs the town and has succeeded in holding the lives and fortunes of the inhabitants in the hollow of his hand. He did not exactly form himself into a trust, but he did the next worse thing and organized a conspiracy to compel everybody to ride in a cab. The ferocious determination with which this diabolical scheme was carried out paralyzed the officials and threatened to exterminate the police. If a citizen showed his head beyond his garden gate he was compelled to ride in a cab or perish on the spot. After awhile all the ordinary affairs of life were suspended, because all the inhabitants were riding wildly and helplessly in cabs and the revenues of the city were being diverted into the pockets of the Jehus. In this dire extremity, the mayor bethought him of offering a prize to the cabman who was most successful in not attending to his business. And now, it is said, this trick works like a charm. Men no longer fear to be seen upon the streets, and if you ask a cabman in Evanston to take you from the depot he doffs his hat, makes an apology and even offers to make you a present of his horse and vehicle. The success of the mayor's plan opens a new vista in politics and industry. Let some enterprising manufacturer offer a prize to the walking delegate who will do the least walking. A man who has nothing more than a conviction to live upon will very often die of it, but the same man will consent to live if you offer him a chromo.

It is not easy to understand what the actors want with a church alliance unless it is to better express their naturally religious natures, which any church will allow them to express individually without getting up an organization to do it and appointing a stage manager. An association has been formed which is called the Actors' Church alliance, and its prospectus states that it has for its primary object the assistance of all actors and actresses. Bishop Potter has so far lent himself to the scheme as to preside over the first meeting and to inform his listeners that he had never been in a theater in his life. The benevolent bishop may have thought that this was a special recommendation. The bishop is very sly, especially when he is presiding. So far as the modus operandi of the scheme was developed at this meeting, it seems to be a social and religious scheme. It proposes to make a minister in every town visited by theatrical companies a member of the organization, and thus actors who need advice or assistance in that town can go to him for aid and comfort. If this is seriously meant, it is a most beautiful and liberal scheme. Any one who has seen a stranded theatrical company in an outlying town must have regretted that there was no font of spiritual consolation to which they could repair. It would unquestionably be a source of religious comfort to the stranded Thespians if they knew they could apply at the parsonage. Bishop Potter did not in his address mention any of these things, but he did seem to think that if the actors went to church and performed their Christian duties regularly that there would be fewer objectionable plays produced, and this obvious truism was not combated by anybody.

The commercial traveler is naturally opposed to the monopoly corporations, and well he may be, for there are over 30,000 of him in the United States, making up one of the most energetic and indefatigable classes in the community. Mr. P. E. Dowe, the president of the Commercial Travelers' National league, got before the industrial commission at Washington and told that body that the 30,000 were about to be thrown out of employment by the trust movement, and he estimated the loss in salaries at $60,000,000. He did not estimate how much the hotels, livery stables and railroads would lose, but it must be enormous. He pointed out that while the trusts were making it appear that the reduction of salaries would result in the cheapening of commodities it so far had only enhanced the profits of the monopolies.

There is something suspicious about the sudden discovery of gold in the Philippines. Narrow minded people are apt to think that the politicians may have salted the islands to get up a rush of American immigrants.

WHAT TO READ.

Some Prominent Chicagoans Express Opinions.

In these enlightened times every person who pretends to keep in touch with the progress of the world must read a first-class daily metropolitan newspaper. They who would select the best should be guided by the opinions of prominent newspaper-men who know. Read the following:

"There is no question as to the position occupied by The Chicago Tribune. Its enterprise has been too often demonstrated. As a local and American news-gathering institution it has no superior and few equals. In the matter of foreign cables, no other paper west of New York can be compared to it. These are the things, of course, that go to make a complete and great newspaper. CARTER H. HARRISON, Now Mayor of Chicago, formerly publisher Chicago Times.

"The Chicago Tribune is the best newspaper in the world. I consider its make-up and facilities for gathering news unequalled, although I do not agree with it politically. "WASHINGTON HESSING."

The late Postmaster, Chicago, and publisher Staats Zeitung.

"The Chicago Tribune is beyond question the greatest newspaper in the West, if not in the country. "MARTIN J. RUSSELL," Editor-in-Chief Chicago Chronicle.

DEATH OF S. SMITH.

Last Sunday at 9 o'clock occurred the death of Spencer Smith at his home two miles west of our village.

Mr. Smith has been sick but a short time, having received a third stroke of paralysis about a week ago and but little hope was entertained for his recovery.

He was born at Schoenburg, a little village 4 miles east of Elgin, and later moved to Elgin with his parents. He was united in marriage to Susan Shannon of Elgin and three children blessed their union but none survive.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith have lived in this vicinity for the past few years and during their stay have made many friends by their kind and courteous ways.

The funeral was held at the house Tuesday at 12:30 p. m., after which the remains were borne to Elgin for burial, accompanied by friends, relatives and about 20 members of the Masonic lodge, of which order he was a member.

LETTER FROM PHILIPPINES.

Meycanayan, May 20.

Dear Folks at Home: We have got back to what we call living again, and I think our fighting is over so far as the Minnesota regiment is concerned. I will try and give you a little history of our trip since we started from the railroad track on April 23 until now. We have had different regiments, Col. Somers of the Oregon regiment, with 7 companies of the Oregon, 8 companies of the Minnesota, troop 4th U. S. cavalry and one cannon of the Utah artillery. We left the railroad track at daylight April 23 and marched all day, with stops, to wait until the full train caught up. They had bad roads and travel very slow on the best of roads. Late in the afternoon the Oregon, forming the advance guard, had a brush with the niggers, so we camped for the night, after making about 12 miles. Up at 4 o'clock, moved at daylight, marched two or three miles when we ran into the niggers just outside of a town. The Minnesota regiment was in the lead, we soon were in line of skirmishers and marched into town. The niggers always skip when we get in range. In the afternoon our battalion, under command of Capt. Spear, made a reconnoiter, got pretty close to another town and was fired upon, but no one was hurt. We went back without firing a shot. After a rest of one day we went up and drove the niggers out of town, laid in camp a day or two, then started on the march again and took another town. We were joined by Gen. Lawton and started out to take Balinag, one of the largest towns outside of Manila. The niggers put up a good fight here. I was on the firing line next to the 3rd regiment. Little did I ever think that when we went to see the 3rd regiment at Fort Snelling that I would be fighting side by side with them. Stayed here two days then started on the march again. Ran into the niggers 4 miles out, drove them out of the little town and went into camp. Remained here until the 13th waiting for the wagon train to take back the sick and wounded to the nearest point on the railroad and get more provisions. During this time different companies would make scouting trips. On one of these trips Major Diggles, who was in command of the Minnesota regiment, was hit in the forehead. He lived about three weeks. On the 13th we started on the march and kept it up until we came back to the railroad track at Calumpit on the 24th, after being on the march for over a month and covering over 250 miles, the longest trip that has been made by any troops on these islands. We have to wade rivers and swim the bull trains with horses. We boys most all have sore feet.

No one has shaved for a month. We only had one suit so you can imagine how tough we look. We are at Meycanayan, about 19 miles out of Manila. It is a nice little town. It is fruit season and imagine what we do to fruit. We have a large house here with beds enough for the whole company. Bunker and I have a small bed-room next to the officers' room. Company D is just across the river in a church. We get fresh meat from the city every day, so we are not so poor. I expect to go to town to get the boys who are in the hospital to sign the pay roll. We have not been paid for three months. It is time for the train so I will get this ready for the mail.

Your loving son,
JAY C. PRICE.

PHANTOM SHIP

—OR—
The Flying Dutchman.

—BY CAPTAIN MARRYAT.

"Holy Virgin!" exclaimed the captain, breathless; "I have known ships to go down, but never to come up before."

"The Phantom Ship—the Flying Dutchman," shrieked Schriften; "I told you so, Philip Vanderdecken; there is your father—He, he!"

Philip's eyes had remained fixed on the vessel; he perceived that they were lowering down a boat from her quarter. "It is possible," thought he, "I shall now be permitted!" and Philip put his hand into his bosom and grasped the relic.

Shortly afterward the splash of oars was heard alongside, and a voice calling out: "I say, my good people, give us a rope from forward."

No one answered or complied with the request. Schriften only went up to the captain and told him that if they offered to send letters they must not be received or the vessel would be doomed and all would perish.

A man now made his appearance from over the gunwale, at the gangway. "You might as well have let me had a side rope, my hearties," said he, as he stepped on deck; "where is the captain?"

"Here," replied the captain, trembling from head to foot. The man who accosted him appeared a weather-beaten seaman, dressed in a fur cap and canvas petticoats.

"What do you want?" at last screamed the captain.

"Yes—what do you want?" continued Schriften. "He! he!"

"What, you here, pilot?" observed the man; "well, I thought you had gone to Davy's locker long enough ago."

"He, he," replied Schriften, turning away.

"Why, the fact is, captain, we have had very foul weather, and we wish to send letters home; I do believe that we shall never get round this Cape."

"I can't take them!" cried the captain.

"Can't take them? Well, it's very odd; but every ship refuses to take our letters. It's very unkind; seamen should have a feeling for brother seamen, especially in distress. God knows we wish to see our wives and families again; and it would be a matter of comfort to them if they only could hear from us."

"I can not take your letters—the saints preserve us!" replied the captain.

"We have been a long while out," said the seaman, shaking his head.

"How long?" inquired the captain.

"We can't tell; our almanac was blown overboard, and we have lost our reckoning. We never had our latitude exact now, for we cannot tell the sun's declination for the right day."

"Let me see your letters," said Philip, advancing and taking them out of the seaman's hands.

"They must not be touched!" screamed Schriften.

"Out, monster!" replied Philip; "who dare interfere with me?"

"Doomed! doomed! doomed!" shrieked Schriften, running up and down the deck, and then breaking into a wild fit of laughter.

"Touch not the letters," said the captain, trembling as if in an ague fit.

Philip made no reply, but held his hand out for the letters.

"Here is one from our second mate to his wife at Amsterdam, who lives on Waser Quay."

"Waser Quay has long been gone, my good friend; there is now a large dock for ships where it once was," replied Philip.

"Impossible!" replied the man; "here is another from the boatswain to his father, who lives in the old market-place."

"The old market place has long been pulled down, and there now stands a church upon the spot."

"Impossible!" replied the seaman; "here is another from myself to my sweetheart, Vrow Ketter—with money to buy her a new brooch."

Philip shook his head. "I remember seeing an old lady of that name buried some thirty years ago."

"Impossible! I left her young and blooming. Here's one for the house of Stutz & Co., to whom the ship belongs."

"There's no such house now," replied Philip; "but I have heard that many years ago there was a firm of that name."

"Impossible! you must be laughing at me. Here is a letter from our captain to his son—"

"Give it me," cried Philip, seizing the letter. He was about to break the seal, when Schriften snatched it out of his hand, and threw it over the lee gunwale.

"That's a scurvy trick for an old shipmate," observed the seaman. Schriften made no reply, but catching up the other letters which Philip had laid down on the capstan, he hurried them after the first.

The strange seaman shed tears, and walked again to the side. "It is very hard—very unkind," observed he, as he descended; "the time may come when you may wish that your family should know your situation." So saying, he disappeared. In a few seconds was heard the sound of the oars retreating from the ship.

"Holy St. Antonio!" exclaimed the captain. "I am lost in wonder and fright. Steward, bring me up the arack."

The steward ran down for the bottle; being as much alarmed as his captain, he helped himself before he brought it up to his commander. "Now," said the captain, after keeping his mouth for two minutes to the bottle, and draining it to the bottom, "what is to be done next?"

"I'll tell you," said Schriften, going up to him; "that man there has a charm hung round his neck; take it from him and throw it overboard, and your ship will be saved; if not, it will be lost, with every soul on board."

"Yes, yes, it's all right, depend upon it," cried the sailors.

"Fools," replied Philip; "do you believe that wretch? Did you not hear the man who came on board recognize him and call him shipmate? He is the party whose presence on board will prove so unfortunate."

"Yes, yes," cried the sailors; "it's all right; the man did call him shipmate."

"I tell you it's all wrong!" cried Schriften; "that is the man; let him give up the charm."

"Yes, yes; let him give up the charm," cried the sailors, and they rushed upon Philip.

Philip started back to where the captain stood. "Madden, know ye what you are about? It is the holy cross that I wear round my neck. Throw it overboard if you dare, and your souls are lost forever," and Philip took the relic from his bosom and showed it to the captain.

"No, no, men!" exclaimed the captain, who was now more settled in his nerves; "that won't do—the saints protect us."

The seamen, however, became clamorous; one portion were for throwing Schriften overboard, the other for throwing Philip; at last the point was decided by the captain, who directed the small skiff hanging astern to be lowered down, and ordered both Philip and Schriften to get into it. The seamen approved of the arrangement, as it satisfied both parties. Philip made no objection; Schriften screamed and fought, but he was tossed into the boat. There he remained trembling in the stern-sheets, while Philip, who had seized the sculls, pulled away from the vessel in the direction of the Phantom Ship.

CHAPTER XXXII.

In a few minutes the vessel which Philip and Schriften had left was no longer to be discerned through the thick haze; the Phantom Ship was still in sight, but at a much greater distance from them than she was before. Philip pulled hard toward her, but, although hove-to, she appeared to increase her distance from the boat. For a short time he paused on his oars to regain his breath, when Schriften rose up and took his seat in the stern-sheets of the boat. "You may pull and pull, Philip Vanderdecken," observed Schriften, "but you will not gain that ship—no, no, that cannot be—we may have a long cruise together, but you will be as far away from your object at the end of it as you are now at the commencement. Why don't you throw me overboard again? You would be all the lighter. He! he!"

"I threw you overboard in a state of frenzy," replied Philip, "when you attempted to force from me my relic."

"And have I not endeavored to make others take it from you this very day? Have I not? He! he!"

"You have," rejoined Philip; "but I am now convinced that you are as unhappy as myself, and that in what you are doing you are only following your destiny, as I am mine. Why and wherefore I cannot tell, but we are both engaged in the same mystery; if the success of my endeavors depends upon guarding the relic, the success of yours depends upon your obtaining it, and defeating my purpose by so doing. In this matter we are both agents, and you have been, as far as my mission is concerned, my most active enemy. But, Schriften, I have not forgotten, and never will, that you kindly did advise my poor Amine; that you prophesied to her what would be her fate if she did not listen to your counsel; that you were no enemy of hers, although my enemy; for her sake I forgive you, and will not attempt to harm you."

"You do then forgive your enemy, Philip Vanderdecken," replied Schriften, mournfully, "for such I acknowledge myself to be."

"I do, with all my heart, with all my soul," replied Philip.

"Then you have conquered me, Philip Vanderdecken; you have made me your friend, and your wishes are about to be accomplished. You would know who I am. Listen. When your father, defying the Almighty's will, in his rage, took my life, he was vouchsafed a choice of his doom being canceled through the merits of his son. I had also my appeal, which was for vengeance; it was granted that I should remain on earth and thwart your will. That as long as we were enemies you should not succeed, but that when you had conformed to the highest attribute of Christianity, proved on the holy cross, that of forgiving your enemy, your task should be fulfilled. Philip Vanderdecken, you have forgiven your enemy, and both our destinies are now accomplished."

As Schriften spoke Philip's eyes were fixed upon him. He extended his hand to Philip—it was taken; and as it was pressed, the form of the pilot wasted as it were into the air, and Philip found himself alone.

Philip then pulled toward the Phantom Ship, and found that she no longer appeared to leave; on the contrary, every minute he was nearer and nearer, and at last he threw in his oars and climbed up her sides, and gained her decks.

The crew of the vessel crowded around him.

"Your captain," said Philip; "I must speak with your captain."

"Who shall I say, sir?" demanded one, who appeared to be the first mate.

"Who?" replied Philip. "Tell him his son would speak to him—his son, Philip Vanderdecken."

Shouts of laughter from the crew followed this answer of Philip, and the mate, as soon as they had ceased, observed with a smile:

"You forget, sir, perhaps you would say his father."

"Tell him his son, if you please," replied Philip; "take no note of gray hairs."

"Well, sir, here he is coming forward," replied the mate, stepping aside, and pointing to the captain.

"What is all this?" inquired the captain.

"Are you Philip Vanderdecken, the captain of this vessel?"

"I am, sir," replied the other.

"You appear not to know me! But how can you? You saw me when I was only three years old; yet may you remember a letter which you gave to your wife."

"Ha!" replied the captain. "And who, then, are you?"

"Time has stopped with you, but with those who live in the world he stops not; and for those who pass a life of misery he hurries on still faster. In me behold your son, Philip Vanderdecken, who has obeyed your wishes; and, after a life of such peril and misery as few have passed, has at last fulfilled his vow, and now offers to his father the precious relic that he required to kiss."

"My son, my son!" exclaimed he, rising and throwing himself into Philip's arms; "my eyes are opened—the Almighty knows how long they have been obscured." Embracing each other, they walked aft, away from the men, who were still crowded at the gangway.

The elder Vanderdecken knelt down; Philip did the same, still embracing each other with one arm, while they raised on high the other and prayed.

For the last time the relic was taken from the bosom of Philip and handed to his father—and his father raised his eyes to heaven and kissed it. And, as he kissed it, the long, tapering upper spars of the phantom vessel, the yards and sails that were set, fell into dust, fluttered in the wind, and sank upon the wave. The mainmast, foremast, bowsprit, everything above the deck crumbled into atoms and disappeared.

Once more did he put the sacred emblem to his lips, and the beams and timbers separated, the decks of the vessel slowly sank, and the remnants of the hull floated upon the water; and as the father and son—the one young and vigorous, the other old and decrepit—still kneeling, still embracing with their hands raised to heaven, sank slowly under the deep blue wave, the lurid sky was for a moment illuminated by a lightning cross.

Then did the clouds which obscured the heavens roll away swift as thought—the sun again burst out in all its splendor—the rippling waves appeared to dance with joy. The screaming seagull again whirled in the air, and the scared albatross once more lumbered on the wing; the porpoise tumbled and tossed in their sportive play, the albatross and dolphin leaped from the sparkling sea. All nature smiled as if it rejoiced that the charm was dissolved forever, and that the Phantom Ship was no more.

THE END.

SAID BY A RAILROAD MAN.

George H. Daniels, general passenger agent of New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, recently delivered an address before the New York Press Association. Among other notable things, he said:

Four years ago I predicted that active efforts toward the extension of American commerce by commercial bodies, supported by a liberal and broad-minded policy on the part of our government, would undoubtedly secure to the United States the blessings that come from a great and varied commerce, and I said that the New York Press Association, and similar associations all over the country, could stimulate a public spirit that would insure the important results outlined.

At that time we had no idea that a war between one of the old nations of the earth and our young republic would be fought; at that time we had no idea that American manufacturers would be furnishing locomotives to the English railroads, as well as Japanese, and no one thought four years ago that American bridge builders would go into the open market and successfully compete for the building of a great steel bridge in Egypt; nor that in so brief a time American engineers would be building railroads into the interior of China from the most important seaports and furnishing locomotives by the score to nearly every country on the globe. In a letter from a friend in Tokio, Japan, written only a short time ago, there was this significant sentence: "You will be interested in knowing that I have hanging on the wall of my office a framed picture of your 'Empire State Express,' and we expect in the near future to be hauling a Japanese 'Empire Express,' with an American locomotive."

They have now in Japan nearly 100 locomotives that were built in the United States. In Russia they have over 400 of our locomotives, and nearly every railroad in Great Britain has ordered locomotives from this country since the beginning of the war with Spain.

In this connection it will be interesting to note in passing that the second American locomotive was built at the West Point Foundry, near Cold Spring, on the Hudson river, and was called the "Best Friend," and from that day to this the locomotive has been one of the best friends of all our people. But it is not alone our locomotives that have attracted the attention of foreigners who have visited our shores, our railway equipment generally has commanded admiration and is now receiving the highest compliment, namely, imitation by many of our sister nations. Prince Michel Hilko, Imperial Minister of Railways of Russia, has, since his visit to the United States a few years ago, constructed a train on much the same lines as the New York Central's Lake Shore Limited. Only a short time ago, at the request of one of the Imperial Commissions of Germany, the New York Central sent to Berlin photographs of the interior and exterior of our finest cars and other data in relation to the operation of American railways. Several other countries have asked for similar information and there is a general waking up of foreign nations on the subject of transportation, brought about mainly by the wonderful achievements of American railways.

The admiration of foreign nations for us is not by any means confined to railways. One incident that startled the entire world, and riveted the attention of thinking people everywhere to American achievements in machinery, was that of the United States battleship "Oregon," built at the Union Iron Works in San Francisco, and which steamed a distance of more than half round the globe, without loosening a bolt or starting a rivet, and arrived at her post off the island of Cuba prepared to perform any service required of her; and then having given a most satisfactory account of herself on that memorable 2d of July, 1898, off Santiago, she steamed back to the Pacific, and without unnecessary delay crossed that great ocean to join Admiral Dewey's fleet at Manila. On her arrival there the Secretary of the Navy received one of those condensed messages, for which the admiral—who has shed undying luster upon the name of the American navy—is so noted, which read as follows: "Manila, March 18, 1899.—The Oregon and Iris arrived here today. The Oregon is in fit condition for any duty. Dewey."

These demonstrations of what American shipbuilders can accomplish, created a desire on the part of every naval power in the world for ships of the character of the Oregon, and the logical conclusion of thinking people was that if we could build ships like the Oregon, anything else that we built must be of a superior quality, and the demand for American manufacturers began to increase and is increasing with each day, until hundreds of our factories are now running night and day, and business in the United States was never in a more prosperous condition than it is on the 21st day of June, 1899.

It has been said by a great American writer that "trade follows the flag." Our war with Spain has placed our flag upon the islands of the Pacific, directly in the natural track between the Pacific coast of the United States and Japan and China, and as we contemplate our growing commerce with these old nations we are reminded of the prophetic statement made at the completion of the first continuous line of railroad between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, by the joining of the Union and Central Pacific railroads, more than thirty years ago, by that prophet of his time, Thomas H. Benton, who, standing on the summit of the Rocky Mountains and pointing toward the Pacific ocean, said: "There is the East; there is India." Mr. President, since the meeting at Lake George, four years ago, the fortunes of war have placed the United States in the front rank among the powers of the world, and we can no more shirk the responsibility which these events have brought on us as a nation, than we can shirk our responsibility as private citizens.

There are some who seem to think that we might get along without trade with China, and that it is a new-fangled notion that Chinese trade can especially benefit the United States.

Commerce with China is much older than many suppose, for it began 115 years ago, the first vessel sailing from New York on Washington's birthday, in the year 1774. This vessel returned to New York May 11, 1775. The success of the venture was such as to warrant its repetition, and from that day to this, trade between the United States and China has continued without material interruption, until it is now greater in importance and value than that of any other nation trading with China, with the single exception of Great Britain. If we are to continue as one of the great nations of the world, we can hardly afford to ignore a country that comprises one-twelfth of the land area and nearly one-fourth of the population of the globe.

The influence of the press, particularly in this country, is immense, and it is growing year by year, and with reasonable co-operation and reciprocity between the press, the transportation companies and the commercial and industrial interests of the country, there can be no doubt about our supremacy.

At times there have been periods of legislation adverse to the great transportation interests of the country, almost invariably the result of a misunderstanding of the real situation, and the hasty legislation of such times has usually been repealed upon the sober second thought of the people, for in the language of our great Lincoln: "You can fool all the people some of the time, some of the people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time." There are still some people who fear that consolidations, especially of transportation companies, will result disastrously to the general interests of the country. There is one example to which I wish to call your attention, and which, I think, each of you will appreciate. Forty-seven years ago, there was issued an annual pass over the Central Line of Railroads, between Buffalo and Boston, and by the People's Line of Steamboats to New York; this pass bearing the following signatures on the back thereof: Ezekiel C. McIntosh, President, Albany and Schenectady R. R. Co.; Erastus Corning, President, Utica and Schenectady R. R. Co.; John Wilkinson, President, Syracuse and Utica R. R. Co.; Henry B. Gibson, President, Rochester and Syracuse R. R. Co.; Joseph Field, President, Buffalo and Rochester R. R. Co.; William H. Swift, President, Western R. R. Co.; Isaac Newton, People's Line Steamboats; Job Collamer, Watertown & Rome R. R. Co.

Mr. E. D. Worcester, Secretary of the New York Central, says he rode on a ticket of this kind from Albany to Boston in the summer of 1852, and he remembers distinctly the signature of each of these Presidents. What would you think if in preparing to attend your annual meeting you had to write to eight different persons to secure transportation from New York to Niagara Falls? I am sure you appreciate the fact that it does not require eight letters to secure such transportation, nor does it require seven changes of cars to make the journey as it did in 1852.

WHERE PEOPLE NEVER MARRY.

One of the questions confronting Lord Curzon, the viceroy of India, is how he is going to introduce marriage into a certain province that has a population of a million or so. The people are called Nairs and reside on the Malabar coast. All descent is traced through the female line, the descendants of one female ancestor living together and holding their property jointly. Even if an individual acquires separate property, at his death it goes into the family pot, and his children get nothing. His highness the zamorin and the Brahmins claim divine sanction for the system and will oppose any legal measure to make marriage compulsory. There may have been a time when the present system worked well, but that is past. As things are, female education is out of the question and the honorable, happy state of wifehood and motherhood is impossible. The home has no existence, while the tie of mutual love and honor which unites parents and children is unknown. The custom is known as "marumakatayam."

CONSUMPTION.

KNOXVILLE, IOWA, Nov. 23, 1898. I, the undersigned, being benefitted by the use of your Swedish Essence, invariably recommend it to my friends. Last spring I visited a cousin whom I had not seen for many years. When I last saw her the family consisted of mother and three daughters; she told me her mother and sisters were all dead, having died from consumption, and now she was in very poor health, the doctors telling her she would soon die, as she had the same disease. She was very despondent, knowing her doom. I questioned her as to her condition, and made up my mind I would be the means of curing her. I told her to quit all doctors and send for a package of Zaegel's Swedish Essence and give it a fair trial. She said she would. I left and did not see her again for about seven months, when I called on her again and found a great change. I immediately remarked that she looked different to what she was when I last saw her, and she said: "I believe Osteopathy is one of the most wonderful discoveries of the age. It makes a man step forth new. It is the best field now open to men and women starting in life." WE EMPLOY MORE OPERATORS THAN ANY OTHER OSTEOPATHIC INSTITUTION IN THE WORLD. Supervisors J. A. Mason, Arthur Cooke and Miles T. Lamey met at Mr. Burkitt's farmhouse, near Fairfield, yesterday to hear reasons for and against the laying out of a new road from Mr. Burkitt's place to Gilmer. The supervisors affirmed the decision of the commissioners and rejected the prayer of the petitioners for the new road.

Card of Thanks.

Through the columns of THE REVIEW we wish to extend our sincere thanks to the many kind friends and neighbors who so kindly rendered their assistance during the illness and death of our late wife and mother.

An Editor Finds a Sure Cure for Rheumatism.

A. R. De Fluent, editor of the Journal, Doylestown, Ohio, suffered for a number of years with rheumatism in his right shoulder and side. He says: "My right arm at times was entirely useless. I tried Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and was surprised to receive relief almost immediately. The Pain Balm has been a constant companion of mine ever since and it never fails." For sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.

Muzzle Your Dogs.

Notice is hereby given that all dogs running at large without being muzzled will be dealt with in accordance with an ordinance relating thereto after July 8.

Would Not Suffer So Again for Fifty Times Its Cost

I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me all right. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be without it in my house hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H. Wilson, Liverman, Burgettstown, Washington Co., Pa. This remedy is for sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.

The Omaha exposition commands the honest admiration of the country, not on account of the successful imitation of the Chicago Midway or the numerous diversifications which it offers to the mere amusement seekers, but rather on account of the exhibition which it makes of the marvelous rapidity of growth and progress made by a comparatively new country. No one can attend this showing without being amazed at the literalness with which Nebraska has fulfilled the prophecy that the desert shall blossom as the rose. In all that relates to the state and the inexhaustible riches of the west the exposition will rank with any that has been made in our country.

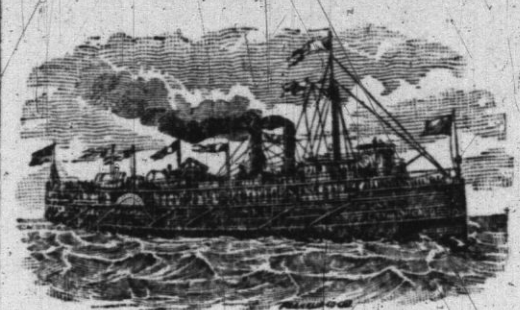

Oregon has now produced a man who threatens to rivet the attention of the universe. His name is Eugene Leoper, and he works at odd jobs for 20 cents an hour. All sorts of stories are finding their way into the papers about him. His particular merits are strength, endurance, patience, industry and modesty. He can do more work at 20 cents an hour than any ten men in the state, and he doesn't kick except when there isn't work enough. He has even been known to refuse an extra 20 cents when he was an hour short. When this was first reported in the east, the freak hunters looked incredulous and called it a wild and woolly fake. But the evidence is accumulating that it is true. At the last accounts Hamlin Garland was fitting out an exploring expedition to capture him.

The flurry of excitement in San Francisco over two cases of bubonic plague introduced there in a Japanese trader is probably unnecessary and unwarranted. It is extremely doubtful if the plague could in the most favorable circumstances for propagation obtain a foothold in this country. Its dissemination is controlled by climatic conditions utterly beyond the reach of science. But science has augmented those conditions by sanitary laws and moral resistance. From time immemorial the plague has followed the course of ignorance, superstition and filth.

Rudyard Kipling is the first author to employ a manager who travels with him, looks out for his advance notices, sues publishers and handles the press. Mr. Doubleday, the enterprising manager, always speaks of Mr. Kipling as "we," in the true editorial style.
