A good illustration of the effect of the abolishment of township organization of country towns was shown last week when a number of Palatine citizens were called before the board of review. The majority of those called before the board went in and were put upon the "rack" to see if they scheduled their property correctly. It made no difference whether the schedules given in were correct or not, all were scheduled for more property. In some instances the raising of the assessment was just, but in other cases it was not. If all country towns received the raise in proportion as Palatine the personal property taxes would be raised considerable. The inconsistency of the matter is shown in the daily records of the board in regard to large property owners in Chicago. Many have escaped any assessment at all and hundreds of others are rated very low. The country towns are compelled to shoulder not only their full burden of taxation, but also a big share of the wealthy, grasping citizens of Chicago. THE REVIEW is opposed to the abolishment of our township organizations. We are oppressed by the political influence of the majority and we shall never consent to place the country towns in a firmer grasp of Chicago's injustice.

THE REVOLUTION IN SAN DOMINGO.

A Filibustering Expedition With Our Government Vessel and Arms Which Came Near Having Important Consequences.

Gen. Don Juan Isidro Jimenez says that he is the real leader of the Dominicans, that his agents murdered President Heureaux, and that he is going to take possession of the government. He ought to be able to do almost anything after his remarkable deception of the United States government, which nearly became a party to his schemes unwittingly and had to crawl out of a bad situation with the best grace possible. Is it partly for fear that Jimenez will land in the presidential chair of San Domingo, that the navy department has dispatched the New Orleans and the Michias southward in hot haste? Or does the administration want to see Jimenez seated and secure the annexation of San Domingo?

San Domingo is a very beautiful, fruitful, but not a very big island. In fact, there is but room for one big man there at a time. This was the conviction of the late President Heureaux. He was the one big man. There was another, however. His name was Don Juan Isidro Jimenez, and he was a rich merchant, with immense plantations on the island, great warehouses, and commercial branches in New York, Hamburg and other cities of the world. Jimenez was a great traveler, which contributed to his longevity.

But every time he landed the island sagged considerably in that direction.

foreign standards. You are well liked at the custom house, so I understand, and it seems to be mutual." General Don Juan smiled proudly.

"Now, general, while you are growing richer, the presidential prerogative regrets to say that the island is growing poorer. I am going to perform a grand coup. I am going to float a many million dollar loan with the Americans, and I am going to rebond the customs of San Domingo as security. I am going to allow a foreigner to sit in the seat of customs, and you know, general, these people have eyes in the back of their heads. Take heed, then.

"Make yourself less popular. Popularity is a growing disease on the island. Check yours in the incipient stage or it will be fatal. Remember, during my sixteen years of divine prerogative no less than four hundred of the most daringly amiable gentlemen of the island have been picked off because of these growing pains of popularity. If two great men—a Heureaux and a Jimenez—remain on the island at the same time without its sinking, it is because one remains quiet and I assure you it shall not be Heureaux. That's all. Adios!"

Gen. Jimenez went away a sad man. Soon he saw the Americans come, lay down bags of gold out of a ship's hold, metropolis, Don Juan Jimenez was seized with a big idea. He went to the war department at Washington and became impressive. Secretary Alger and his assistant, Mr. Meiklejohn, instantly fell under the spell of the eloquence of this Othello of the Antilles. Handsome, robust, swarthy, with abundant black hair, streaked with gray, he was a figure worthy of a heroic cause.

"Gentlemen," said he, "I am no less a personage than Don Juan Rodriguez, with the blood of a hundred kings in my veins, but a patriot for all that, and a republican patriot, too. I have dedicated my life to a purpose. It is to help liberate Cuba from the Spanish yoke. I am in secret conference daily with the heads of the junta. I am a bosom friend of Gen. Gomez, a native of San Domingo, even as I, and I will lay down my life for the cause. Listen!

"We have arranged a grand filibustering expedition. We want from Uncle Sam three million rounds of ammunition, three thousand rifles, equipments, saddles, revolvers, dynamite, medicines, and, in fact, a whole ship load of supplies, and the ship, too. I will guarantee to land them safely in a secret port of Cuba, where I shall be met by two thousand of the patriots. The Spanish strongholds shall be attacked and demolished. Voila, gentle-Fanita will be there speedily. Go, and the ministering angels be with you. Only, look out for the Spanish cruisers."

Don Juan made his profoundest salute, and left the war department.

Back to New York he raced. By night he gathered unto him a handful of San Domingo refugees like himself. There was one Gen. Morales, intimate with the Porto Rican patriots, one Mercado, Villanueva and others.

"Gentlemen," said he, "I have made the grand coup of my career. The tyrant Heureaux is as good as in his coffin. I have hoodwinked Uncle Sam into giving me a government vessel, and stocking it with ammunition from stem to stern, free of charge, on pretense of going to Cuba to help Gen. Gomez. Come, let us hie hence to Mobile. You, Gen. Morales, shall be my secretary of war. You, Villanueva, my minister of the interior. You, Mercado, I appoint secretary of the treasury. Hence, away! San Domingo, gem of the Antilles, shall be free!"

They started for Mobile by different routes. They arrived, meeting by night only. The arms and ammunition also arrived, consigned to "Rodriguez." The Spanish spies made note of it and informed their government. Then the Fanita came up the bay and the ship was stocked from forecabin to garboard streak. There she was promptly libeled. In haste Jimenez wired to the war department, "Wherefore?" Back came the answer. The libel was a blunder. The department of justice was instructed by the department of war that the Fanita's libel should be lifted. It was done. The vessel set the conspirators met below decks and planned the attack on the morrow.

Jimenez had notified his friend and ally, Gen. Toribio Garcia, a resident of Monte-Christi, that he and his arms and men were coming. He counseled the general to have all in readiness, with at least a thousand men ready to take the arms and advance upon the forts, slaughter the garrisons and then proceed to San Domingo city and the palace of Heureaux. That message never reached Garcia at all. If it had this history would probably never have been written.

It was the red break of day when the great rock that lifts from the sea and shelters Monte-Christi loomed in sight. It was an ideal tropic morning, worthy of a great epoch in the history of the dark republic. The conspirators came on deck, armed to the teeth, silent, determined, savage for glory and spoil. Jimenez drew his glass and scanned the shore for Garcia and his thousand men. Then he trembled. Alas, they were nowhere to be seen! Undaunted, the vessel cast anchor, and two boats were lowered. Into them poured some 18 fighting men, with Jimenez at the prow of the leader. It was a thrilling journey in the silence of that red dawn, typical of blood.

Reaching the shore, Jimenez shouted "Viva, San Domingo libre!" and fired in air the first shot. Undismayed that Garcia and his men were nowhere to be seen, a rush was made toward the governor's palace. He was not found. On thence to the house of Garcia. That astonished gentleman was dragged from his bed by the heels. Back to the palace of the governor the party hastened. The governor was found at last and made an instant prisoner. "On to the fortress!" shouted Jimenez. The little band advanced up the hill toward the fort.

"I command you, on pain of death, to call out to the general of the fort to surrender the garrison!" cried Jimenez, placing a cocked revolver against the governor's temple.

The general of the fort appeared on the parapet above.

"I am ordered, on pain of death, to command you to surrender the garrison," the governor cried to the chief of the troops, "but I swear before heaven now that if you do so, and I ever get free, you shall die for it!" The garrison then opened fire on the conspirators.

Seeing the governor's bravery, the besiegers lost heart. If they had slain him and the general of the garrison then and there they might have succeeded. As it was they hesitated and were lost. Volley after volley thundered from the garrison. The conspirators stampeded to refuge. Then the ignominious retreat began, shoreward, two miles away, with Jimenez in the lead, on horseback, too, at break-neck speed. In the shuffle their prisoner, the governor, was lost, and soon was overtaken by the garrison troops, whom he now led against the conspirators. Into one boat Jimenez plunged and escaped alone to the Fanita under a rain of bullets. Then he ordered the vessel to turn tail and make for the Bahamas with hot speed. Meanwhile the rest of the men were either killed or made prisoners by the troops. Morales was shot, as were seven others.

Jimenez reached Inagua next morning in a state of stage fright. Thinking it high time for disappearing, he attempted to leave the ship and embark on the Schleswig for other points. Roberts, the pilot, gave information to the United States consular agent, Sargent, and Jimenez was arrested on a charge of violating the British foreign enlistment act, attempting an insurrection in a country which was at peace with Great Britain. Meanwhile President Heureaux, who had been instantly informed of the attack, arrived in hot haste on his man-of-war and offered $20,000 for the conviction of Jimenez.

The prisoner was taken to Nassau and tried before the police magistrate of the Bahama islands early in July, but the jury disagreed. Again he was tried before Sir Ormond Drimble Malcomb, chief justice of the Supreme Court, early in August, when the prisoner was discharged. This trial was the sensation of the islands, but owing to the Spanish war, it was of little consequence in America. The president of the Dominican republic brought all the prisoners to the Bahamas to turn state's evidence, and Jimenez's secretary, Manuel Mercado, did so to save his life. Every method was used to convict Jimenez, but the jury gave in the verdict of "Not guilty," and the Don fled to parts unknown.

He was last located in Havana, again conspiring to overthrow Heureaux. This was two months ago. Two weeks ago the San Domingo president was stabbed to death in Moca.

The hero was beside himself with rage. "The serpent," he hissed, for it was in these terms that he was wont to refer to the villain of the plot, "has won the golf trophy!" Genevieve shuddered. "That's what comes of his having been scotched, I doubt not!" she faltered, and would fain have wept. Ah, it was easy now to see where mistakes had been made!—Detroit Journal.

PREZ. HEUREAUX, SAN DOMINGO

SOME PICTURES FROM THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

This displeased President Heureaux, whose palace was in the interior, and who rarely went to the shore for fear that the island would capsize with his weight. One day, when the president saw his palace tilting forty-five degrees to leeward and the crockery was rolling off the pantry shelves, he knew that Gen. Jimenez had arrived. He instantly invited him to dine.

Now, to have the president of San Domingo invite you to dine is not a pleasant sensation. It produces heart failure. Several important people within the sixteen years of President Heureaux's regime had been invited to the executive mansion to dine and were never heard of afterward. But Gen. Jimenez is a brave man. He accepted the invitation, made his will, wrote farewells to his family in Paris, and mounted a white bullock, rapping at the gates of the Dominican white house with true Jeffersonian simplicity. The president opened the door himself—a mark of great condescension as well as business acumen.

Over the tropical dainties the conversation ranged through the affairs of the island, from the exportation of logwood, to the French wine growers, to the importation of Ansonia clocks, which were quite recherche among the Dominican elite as neck ornaments. When the swarthy "slavey" had guillotined the third bottle of champagne with a machete the host opened out.

"Gen. Jimenez," he said gravely, "it is with increasing apprehension that the presidential prerogative views your growing popularity. You are a rich man, a benevolent man, and a just man, so far as you can judge by effete saw an iron cage built around the customs department of Monte-Christi, and a bearded Dutchman, with a cold, glittering eye, two revolvers at each hip and a great head for figures, seat himself within the place of authority. Poor Jimenez bought and sold as before, but his profits fell. The bearded Yankee exacted his tithe from the customs, according to the bond; then he gave into the government treasury the balance, and the island began to grow rich, with sanitary devices, clean water, hospitals for the sick and roads for the traveler, forts garrisoned and three gunboats.

About this time the whole country was in the throes of suspense with Spain. We had little time to consider the bickerings of big men on small islands. War was formally declared. A little before this, in the heart of the men! Here is the chance of your lives. Cuba shall be free! I will give you ten hours to think it over."

Jimenez had the full confidence of Gen. Gomez, with whom he was believed to be co-operating. There seems to be some doubt whether the expedition was intended for Cuba or Porto Rico. It never got to either place.

When the ten hours were up, returning to the war department, the insistent Jimenez found all that he had asked for, and more. "We shall place our newly chartered steamship Fanita at your disposal," said an official. "We shall stock it from stem to stern from the ordnance supplies. Go and gather your men together, and hasten to Mobile, Ala. There you will find the arms and accoutrements shipped to you under the name of 'Rodriguez.' The sail southward on May 24. It was a journey worthy of history. It outshone the doubtful glory of old privateering days.

But did the Fanita make straightway for the green shores of Cuba, as pledged to the war department? Nay, nay. When well to sea she simply swerved southeasterly, and on May 30 arrived at a little island of the British Bahamas called Inagua. There, the coast being dangerous, she took on a pilot—one Christopher Roberts. He was told that the Fanita was loaded with general cargo bound for San Domingo. The vessel was flying the American flag, and also the ensign of the Clyde line, from which company she had been chartered by the government. Two stops were made, and co-conspirators were taken aboard. At ten o'clock of the last night,

After Dinner Diplomacy.

Mr. Choate, our ambassador in London, said at the Fourth of July dinner there, "When you have said, God save the queen and God save the president of the United States, you have the complete diplomatic outfit for an ambassador of the United States to the court of St. James." There is an amiable smoothness to this that is suspicious. In the first place, is it true, and, if it is true, has not the outfit changed somewhat from former days? Are the two countries then linked by the mere amenities? Are our ambassadors merely courtiers who carry a phrasemaking mission? With each new appointment the diplomatic routine grows more and more of a merely social responsibility, as if the two countries needed official iteration of sentiments and good wishes accompanied by good dinners. One does not have to doubt Mr. Choate's ability as an American representative, nor to question his stanchness should an international issue arrive, but when he sums up his duties in the utterance of empty phrases he does great injustice to the office he fills and to the expectations of the people he represents.

On June 2 the last of the notorious gangs of outlaws in the west held up and dynamited the Union Pacific express train in Wyoming. They were under a leader of the name of Curry, and their robbery produced so much excitement and aroused so much indignation that they made a hasty flight, pursued by detectives, sheriffs and citizens, amounting in all to 400 men. They have not yet been captured, and they have traveled over 1,500 miles since committing the crime. Three times they have been surrounded by ten times their number, yet by a display of desperate courage and their knowledge of woodcraft they managed each time to get away. Eighteen thousand dollars had been offered as a reward for their capture, and the consequence has been that they did not dare to stop among their old outlaw friends for fear of being betrayed. The pursuit was so hot that they were driven on into the Big Horn basin, then through the Powder river country into Jackson's Hole, the wildest and most desolate stretch of mountain country in the west. Here the Indian police under Baldwin got after them and chased them south toward the Utah mountains, and it was here that they were completely lost. A great deal has been written about the courage and recklessness and dashing prowess of these villains, and the story as usually set forth makes that kind of a narrative which debauches the minds of boys all over the country. But the fact of the case is that these robbers are leading the lives of hunted wild beasts. A more wretched and helpless condition of existence than they are enduring cannot be conceived. They dare not emerge from their hiding places, and they never lie down to sleep without the fear that they will be awakened by the ring of pursuing rifles. Their condition is not romantic, and it may be said that their fate is sealed. This is the view of it that should be brilliantly written up for the boys of the country.

The erection of a monument to the memory of Heinrich Heine in New York probably shows, as Mr. Guggenheimer said it did, how cosmopolitan that city is. But it may very well be questioned if Heinrich Heine, who was an eccentric genius, appeals largely to that American sentiment which is the resultant of so many nationalities. Heine is a fine example of the French spirit grafted upon the German stock. Neither his poetry nor his philosophy obtains to any large extent in this country. We know him best by his humor and cynicism, both of which were bitter and reckless, and they are singularly dissonant to the optimism of America.

A clever woman who was present at the woman's international congress declares that the flood of oratory swamped all practical efforts to do anything. There were five sections of the congress all talking at once, on every conceivable human subject, and the most luminous and voluble was the discussion on what was called "murderous millinery." This discussion was carried on by brilliantly dressed women wearing feathers in their hats, but all of whom denounced most bitterly the killing of birds and of inoffensive seals in order to decorate other women than themselves.

A number of clergymen in Ann Arbor, representing five denominations, have met and pledged themselves not to marry divorced persons without the most searching and rigid examination into their antecedents. This is a good move in the interests of society and morals, but one wonders why a clergyman should need associated help to do that which is a plain duty presented by his own conscience.

The rainfall this year has been unusually eccentric and so unevenly distributed that while the Ohio valley was suffering from drought Texas was being swept into the gulf by a phenomenal downpour. In certain portions of the state land was not visible to the naked eye, much less future crops.

The Muscular Girl.

Several eminent physiologists have recently uttered a warning note against the use women are making of athletics. A writer in The Nineteenth Century arrays a mass of facts to show that women who push their muscular developments to the utmost in imitation of men do so in pitiable ignorance of the organic difference in the sexes and with lamentable results to other womanly requirements. It is shown by another writer that women cannot arrive through athletics at a condition of physical strength at all comparable to man's without suffering a corresponding loss of nervous energy and destroying that delicacy of adjustment which is distinctly characteristic of the feminine and which is as valuable to the race as mere physical strength. It has been found that the children of the working classes who have had to toil at laborious physical tasks for a living, and are almost equally stalwart in their development, do not produce the best children physically. They are superior neither in brain nor in will power and do not, in the long run, compare with the product of the more leisured classes, in which the opposite qualifications of the sexes have been united and preserved. These considerations have led to much comment on the overdoing of athletics by girls, and it is beginning to be suspected that in bringing the girls up to the physical standard of their brothers we are in danger of robbing them of a psychical superiority that they have so long possessed and which, after all is said and done, was their abiding advantage.

In determining to put no restrictions on the public utterances of its professors the Chicago university has set a good example. It does not hold itself responsible for the views and opinions that its faculty as individuals may express, nor does it desire to smother or restrict those opinions. This is a great jump forward. It concedes at once that a professor may have his own views, concerning some of the thousand things that claim attention, but those views need not be the views of the university he serves, and what is of more importance they need not impair his loyalty and usefulness in that institution. There is a generous liberality in this decision which smacks of "the stream of tendency." The highest order of intelligence must differ in its point of view in each individual as to means and details, but it will generally be found that on certain essential truths the individual opinions give way to established principles, and the most diverse minds can work together without sacrificing any of the essentials.

Ex-Governor Hogg of Texas, who as a politician understands whirlwinds thoroughly, has a theory that the world is nearing the glacial period, and he bases this opinion on the unprecedented floods in Texas. He seems to have overlooked the fact that the approaching glacial period has not particularly affected the rest of the country.

M. Flammarion, the French astronomer, has come out strongly against modern spiritualism, after having been what he calls a victim of a medium for five years. He now declares that in all that time he has never been able to verify a single communication or to identify the intelligence that communicated it. M. Flammarion should be invited at once to investigate Mrs. Piper.

Mr. and Mrs. Clough will continue their trip to North Adams, Vt., their old home, where they have numerous relatives and friends. Mr. Davis and daughter and Mr. Harris will visit with relatives in Boston and vicinity.

Alf. Nichols met with quite a serious accident Saturday evening while making his way down town. It was quite dark and his lamp being quite bothersome he did not light it. All went well until within a short distance of Mr. Clough's house. He glided past a rig, but no sooner had he done so when he struck something, which proved to be a horse driven by Lewis Grosvenor, who was just turning into the driveway of Mr. Clough's yard. The horse became frightened, reared up and came down heavily on the wheel, bending and breaking the frame in a terrible manner.

Friday morning of last week occurred the death of Mrs. Adelia A. Anderson at the home of her son, A. F. Anderson, age 81 years. She had been sick for the past few years, but still looked after the household duties until her strength gave away and she was borne to the land of the blessed. Mrs. Anderson was born in Fairfield, N. Y., February 18, 1818. She moved West with her parents and lived for a number of years in and around Cleveland, O. From there they moved to Muskegon, Mich., where she was married March 28, 1839, to James H. Anderson. In company with her husband she then went to New Haven, where Mr. Anderson worked in a cabinet factory and later moved to Chicago. Being tired of city life, they moved on a farm near Half Day. In 1845 they purchased the 40 acres, where the house now stands. Three children—Edward, Francis, Alonzo—blessed this union, the latter still survives to mourn her departure. The funeral services were held at the Baptist church at 10:30 a. m. Sunday, Rev. Eaton officiating, after which the remains were interred in the Waukegan cemetery.

The marriage of Miss Mary Doretta Geary, one of our most prominent young ladies, to Mr. John N. Zimmer of Long Grove Wednesday at the Transfiguration Catholic church of Waukegan was one of the most pleasant events of the season. The ceremony was performed at 10 o'clock, Rev. Father O'Neill officiating. The church was filled to the doors with relatives and friends of the young people. A wedding march was played as the bridal party filed down the aisle. Miss Vera Geary, sister of the bride, and Misses Emma and Lena Zimmer, sisters of the groom, acted as bridesmaids, Geo. Zimmer, a brother of the groom, Harry Geary, a brother of the bride and Herman Maiman were the groomsmen. The bride was very handsomely attired in a gown of white satin, trimmed with white satin ribbon and valenciennes lace and carried white roses. The bridesmaids were gowned in white and carried white roses. After the ceremony the bridal party and a large number of guests went to the Oakland hotel, where an elaborate dinner was served, after which the afternoon was most pleasantly spent with general social entertainment and dancing. At 4:30 the newly married couple went to Grayslake, accompanied by the bridal party, where they took the 7:03 train for Waukegan. They will be at home to their many friends and relatives next Monday at the home of the groom's parents at Long Grove. The great number of useful and costly presents which they received was a manifestation of the regard in which each is held. Both are well known in the county and we extend to them our heartiest congratulations and best wishes for a happy and prosperous life.

It has no vibration.

no Noise, on Lost Power.
No Cog Wheels to wear out.
Freedom Slide Draft and free from Neck weight.
No backing up to start in the grass.

THE PLANO is the simplest and best.

The following are a few of the points why the Plano machines are the best over other makes:

In the Plano Jones Lever Binder the knotter contains only 16 pieces, while the Deering has 44, McCormick 28 and the Champion 33.

It is the only binder put up with lever power, carrying spring, friction clutch reel and jointless main frame. The main drive wheel is two inches wider than any other made, consequently the machine will not mire or settle down in soft or loose ground.

Farmers should examine this machine before placing their order.

It was Miss Branscombe. The hood of her light mantle was drawn over her head and face, and as she came swiftly on, with downcast head, she was unconscious of my presence until she almost touched me. At the first recognition she gave a little cry and started back, the next instant she had recovered herself, and something of the womanly dignity which I had admired in her at our first meeting returned to her bearing. She made no apology or excuse for her presence there on such a night and at such an hour; she merely bowed her head with a murmured "Thank you," as I threw open the door and stood back for her to precede me into the hall. She did not, as I half expected, try to excuse or account for her late walk, but with another bow she passed on and up the wide staircase. The light from a hanging lamp fell upon her face as she turned to mount the steps, and I saw that her eyes were swollen with tears and her cheeks deadly pale. She held tightly by the carved oak balustrade too as she went slowly up and out of my sight.

"And so," I said to myself, as, haunted by a spirit of unrest, I paced the floor of my room long after midnight—"so dies the last lingering remnant of my faith in womanhood." But it was dying hard. It was, hydra-headed, apparently, and sprang into fresh life as fast as I set my heel upon the last quivering fragment, and at last, when I sought my bed, I knew that neither my faith, nor a mad love, as wild and impossible as the love of the wave for the star, was dead within me. I had found a hundred excuses, a hundred reasons, which left Nona Branscombe my pure sweet ideal still; and withal, I was the most unhappy man in the United Kingdom. Had Miss Branscombe been the penniless girl her friends and neighbors had pre-firmed and to myself, and to linger in the sunshine which could only scorch me.

"On the spot, yes; but not in the house," Mr. Heathcote answered gravely, accepting the cup of tea which Miss Elmslie offered him. "You are singularly destitute of male relatives, Miss Elmslie?" he added, addressing her.

"Yes," she sighed; "there is absolutely no one. The dear colonel represented our whole family, excepting—"

"Yes, yes!" interrupted the rector, hastily. "You are entirely unprotected, unfortunately. I wish it had been possible for Mr. Fort to remain with you until after the funeral; but it is a point I can hardly press, as he has been good enough to give us already so much of his valuable time."

"We should indeed be glad," said Miss Elmslie, looking appealingly at me.

So I was impelled by the irresistible force of fate into the current which could only bear me to disastrous shipwreck.

"I could return," I said, answering the appeal of Miss Elmslie. And oh, what a rush of dangerous joy thrilled through my veins at the thought of once more being under the same roof with Nona Branscombe! "My arrangements are made for to-day, as you know. I must run up to town; but if I can assist you by returning to Forest Lea, I will do so immediately—as soon as I have seen my partners."

"It will be the greatest comfort," Miss Elmslie assured me, with tears in her eyes. And so it was settled.

"I will drive with you to the station," the rector said, as the dog-cart came round. "I have business there. Are you a good whip? No?"—as I shook my head. "Well, I will take the reins then. Mason"—to the groom—"cut across the park while we drive pass those two unprotected women, or he may work upon the feelings of a susceptible and romantic girl like Nona, and neutralize all the wise provisions of his uncle. There is no telling what, in the first emotional workings of such a character as this sweet young girl's, Charlie may make her do for him—give up Forest Lea, I shouldn't be surprised, and ruin herself and all who depend upon her. The fellow is, I am sorry to say, utterly irreclaimable—money runs through his hands as if they were sieves. The poor old colonel gave him chance after chance, and he threw them away one after the other. It is a hopeless case."

"And Miss Branscombe," I said, forcing myself to utter the words which choked me—"Miss Branscombe is attached to her cousin?"

"I fear so," answered the rector gloomily—"my wife thinks so, unfortunately. I am speaking confidentially to you, Mr. Fort," he added, turning abruptly to me.

"We lawyers, like doctors, come in for the secrets of a good many families," I answered, for want of something better to say.

"Just so," assented the rector; "and we want your help, Mr. Fort. You see it is important to keep this young scapegrace out of the way. Your presence at the Lea, and the exercise of the tact and friendly kindness you have already shown"—I bowed—"will be invaluable to us at this juncture. After the funeral, Miss Elmslie and Miss Branscombe will leave the place, and a year or two of foreign travel with fresh scenes and associations, will, I have no doubt, make a great difference in Miss Branscombe's views and feelings. She has been brought up in a secluded way, and has seen few people hitherto. All we want is to gain time. But here is my fellow; we must hurry up to catch the 11.10 express."

The 11.10 express was a favorite train, evidently. I congratulated myself on having secured a corner seat next the door, as my carriage filled rapidly. At Wivenhoe, the first stopping station, two seats—that opposite to me, on which I had deposited my black bag and the light dustcoat which I carried, and a second set next to mine—were the only ones unoccupied. The weather was warm, and I was just congratulating myself on having escaped any addition to our number, when, even as the guard's whistle sounded, the handle of the carriage door was hastily turned and a lady, evidently a good deal flustered at the narrow escape she had made of missing the train, sprang lightly in and deposited herself in the vacant place by my side.

It had all happened so suddenly—my head had been turned away at the moment of the lady's appearance—that I had only time to draw my somewhat long limbs out of her path, and none to catch a glimpse of my new neighbor before she was seated next to me.

"Allow me," I said then, offering to relieve her of the small bag and large loose cloak which she held on her knees. "There is room for these here"—indicating the opposite seat, on which my own impedimenta reposed.

She thanked me with a bow and a few murmured indistinct words; and, as I took the two articles from her hands, I caught a glimpse of her face. It was covered with a thick gray gossamer veil, such as ladies use at the seaside or for driving in the country; but the lovely hair that had escaped from beneath the large shady hat, and something in the whole bearing startled me with a wild impossible idea. Had I gone mad, or was the image of Nona Branscombe so imprinted on the retina of my eye that to me every woman must bear her likeness?

I darted another swift keen glance at my neighbor as I resettled myself in my place.

"They will be quite safe there," I said, pointing to her possessions, and then I stopped, breathless. It was no fond illusion of my love-sick fancy. It was Nona herself! The large limpid eyes, which even the thick gossamer veil could not hide, looked into mine for an instant with a warning deprecating expression, the graceful head moved with the scantiest, most distant acknowledgment of any courtesy, and then turned resolutely away. Evidently Miss Branscombe did not choose to recognize me further.

I sat for the next ten minutes stunned and bewildered, watching the meadows and trees as they flew by in endless succession, and trying to steady my mind sufficiently to grasp the situation. Miss Branscombe here alone, unattended—she who had hitherto led such a carefully protected life—traveling alone; and whither? It was certain that neither the rector nor Miss Elmslie had known of her projected journey—the morning's conversation quite precluded the idea. How had she reached the station without being seen by us—the rector or myself?

For several years the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal church has furnished aid for the erection of two churches a day.

DEATH LOSS IS APPALLING.

Awful Destruction the Result of the Recent Great Storm.

FIVE HUNDRED BODIES FOUND.

The Town of Ponce, Porto Rico, the Greatest Sufferer—Stench from Bodies of Unburied Dead May Cause a Plague—Relief Measures Under Way.

It is now plain that Ponce, Porto Rico, was the greatest sufferer by the recent hurricane. The rivers Portuguese and Canas flowed through the city, drowning thousands of people. Five hundred bodies have already been recovered.

The town is wholly destroyed and will have to be rebuilt. There is scarcely a whole building left standing, and the great majority of the larger structures are a mass of ruins. It will be several days before an accurate estimate of the number of deaths can be made.

The storm of 1867 killed 6,000 people. It is feared the number of deaths is greater now.

The southern coast was swept clean as far as Yauco, eighteen miles. The towns of Tallaboa, Arroyo, and Juandiaz were destroyed. Only the large church edifices are left standing.

There is not a drop of water in Ponce to drink. No gas or electric light is available. The cisterns are full of salt water from the ocean, and the stench arising from the dead bodies is dreadful. The sanitary condition is serious and widespread sickness is sure to follow. The soldiers and firemen rendered heroic service in saving lives.

All the crops are totally ruined, the wires are all down, and little news is obtainable from the interior.

Aibonito, including the barracks, has been destroyed, but no lives were lost there. Juandiaz has been devastated. Forty-six lives were lost there. Arroyo, Guayama, Salinas, and San Isabel are reported to have been demolished.

The railroad between Ponce and Yauco has been destroyed and the military road is impassable. The river is flowing over the road for two miles. Mayaguez escaped serious injury. Bananas are the sole food at Ponce. The peons have gone to San Juan and its vicinity.

The war department took prompt measures for the relief of the hurricane sufferers in Porto Rico. A transport loaded with provisions has been sent.

Secretary Root has issued an appeal, through the mayors of all large towns in this country, to the charitably disposed to contribute to the relief of the Porto Ricans.

ISSUES APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE.

Secretary Root Asks for Aid for Sufferers in Porto Rico.

The official dispatches received from Gov.-Gen. Davis represent the situation in Porto Rico as appalling. There are more than 1,000 dead and 100,000 people are in the direst need. In view of this report Secretary Root has issued an appeal to the governors of all the states, that the whole people of the country may be urged to contribute for the relief of the victims of the hurricane.

Recruiting Will Be Continued. It is admitted in official circles that recruiting of volunteers will be continued, but no one in authority will estimate the number to be enlisted.

Yellow Fever in Mexico. Yellow fever at Cordova and Orizaba, Mexico, is spreading and increasing in virulence. The daily number of deaths and new cases is very large.

London to Aid Sufferers. The lord mayor of London has opened a fund for the relief of the victims of the recent West Indian hurricane.

Money for Foreign Missions. At Old Orchard, Maine, the collection of the Christian alliance convention for foreign missions reached $54,881.

"ON THE SPOT, YES; BUT NOT IN THE HOUSE," MR. HEATHCOTE ANSWERED GRAVELY.

maturely declared her to be there would have been neither presumption nor madness in the passion which had taken possession of me, for I was well-born, my prospects were good, and I could have entered the lists fearlessly against all comers. But Miss Branscombe, the heiress, the owner of fifteen thousand a year, was separated from me by a barrier which I recognized as insurmountable. I groaned in spirit as I remembered that my own hand had helped to raise the barrier.

And then I fell into a short troubled slumber, just as the restless twittering of the little birds beneath my window told that the day was breaking.

CHAPTER VI.

Early as it was when I descended to the breakfast room that morning, Miss Elmslie was already down and in deep and anxious conference with the rector. They ceased speaking as I entered, and Mr. Heathcote came forward to greet me.

"I am sorry you are leaving Forest Lea this morning," he said, as Miss Elmslie busied herself with the teacup. "These ladies need—er—in fact, some member of our sex sadly just now. I wish you could have remained."

"You are on the spot," I suggested, fighting with an impulse which tempted me to forget my duty alike to my round, and leave word at my house that I have gone on to Westford. We will pick you up at the end of Park Lane. The fact is," he confided to me, as soon as the man was out of earshot, "that scamp, Charlie Branscombe, has been seen hanging about the place; the purport of the poor old colonel's will will soon ooze out—if it hasn't done so already—and Master Charlie is quite capable of bullying his cousin in the first flush of his disappointment. It was my good old friend's last injunction that Charlie should not be admitted to the Lea, and Miss Nona is tender-hearted in that quarter."

A light flashed upon me. It was Charlie whom she had met in the shrubbery last night—who had smoked that prime Havana and brought those tears to his cousin's sweet eyes; and to Charlie, no doubt, I thought, with a swift pang of jealousy, she had given her young love—the treasure he would squander as remorselessly as he had wasted the more tangible treasures in his hands. And upon me, of all men, by the cruel irony of fate, was forced the task of separating her from the man she loved! Nothing could come to me but pain, disappointment andodium.

"There is more than one element of danger in the case," said the worthy rector. "Charlie may make a disturbance at the Lea, and seriously embar-

LABORI VERY NEAR DEATH.

Fried of Dreyfus Shot Down by an Assassin.

BLOW TO CAUSE OF JUSTICE.

Physicians Hope for the Recovery of the Distinguished Lawyer, but His Presence at the Trial Is Impossible—Would-Be Murderer Escapes.

Two men ambushed Maitre Labori, counsel for Dreyfus, at Rennes, France, and one shot was fired, hitting Labori in the back. M. Labori fell in the roadway. He is mortally wounded.

Fernand Labori still lives, although his physicians hold out but little hope for his recovery. The assassin's bullet has not been removed, and, therefore, the extent of the injury cannot yet be learned.

Even if the wound does not prove fatal, he cannot be well in time to participate in the trial. This is a severe blow to Dreyfus' interests.

All efforts to capture the would-be murderer have so far proved futile. Descriptions of the man have been sent in all directions, and police and military are searching the forests where the assassin may be hiding.

He also gives considerable space to the interior arrangements of the sleeping cars used at that time and says that "they are actually houses where nothing is lacking for the necessity of life and are divided into compartments and sleeping rooms, some for men and some for women." Each room held six beds or rather little couches in three tiers along the sides. He winds up his account by saying that valuables were not particularly well taken care of, as in America there "were no such things as sneak thieves."

CONSTIPATION.

The One Baneful Curse of the American People from which arise Premature Old Age, Lack of Youthful Energy, Sallow Complexion and Haggard, Careworn Look.

DR. HEINEMANN ONE OF THE GREATEST AUTHORITIES OF THE AGE ON THIS SUBJECT SAYS:

"It is constipation, though often unsuspected, that steals from our maidens their freshness and beauty, taking away the lustre from their eyes and the glow from their cheeks, causing the weaknesses peculiar to the female sex and giving them the haggard, worn out look and diminished form when they should be in the best of health. It is Constipation that is the plunderer which robs the manly strength and vigor from men, giving them the fretful, ugly disposition and their listless ways and habits."

It is from this source that we have "Blood Disorders," which cause Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sick Headache, Indigestion, pains in all parts of the body, Running Sores, Pimples, Boils, Carbuncles and Skin Diseases. The blood, becoming thick and overladen with the poisonous impurities, is unable to supply the tissues with proper nourishment, and consequently they become deranged and unhealthy; or the blood becomes so clogged up that the impurities burst through the skin in the shape of boils, pimples and skin diseases.

How to Use the Telephone.

If the general public were to display as little common sense and regard for the proprieties of life at the table as in the use of the telephone, the average person would use the handle instead of the bowl of a spoon to convey liquid food to the lips, and chop sticks would be more common than forks. Moreover, were the incivilities exchanged between business men over the telephone indulged in when the parties to such conversations stand face to face, the police courts would be crowded with quarrelling citizens of eminent respectability, and many of "our best people" would bear the marks of physical punishment at the hands of irate avengers. Men and women who are models of politeness and consideration in their social intercourse habitually violate all the canons of civility in their telephonic treatment of friends and patrons.

One of the most prevalent kinds of telephonic rudeness comes under the head of "holding the wire". You tell your clerk or office boy to "call up Mr. Brown, Main 389." While this order is being carried out you begin the dictation of a letter. Although Mr. Brown has been summoned to the telephone instrument in his office your office boy waits to make the announcement of that fact until the dictation is finished. Just at that time a friend or a patron enters the office and you pause to exchange greetings with him. Finally you excuse yourself to go to the telephone and you are surprised to find Brown appears to be decidedly cranky. You are just as short and snappy with him as he with you, and by the time the conversation is finished you are fortunate if you have not succeeded in permanently alienating a good patron or valued friend.

It does not occur to you that almost literally you have taken Mr. Brown by the ear, led him away from his business and held him by the ear while you dictated to your stenographer and chatted with your caller. Had you attempted to do this in a personal interview you would have been unceremoniously thrown out of Brown's office.

When asked to formulate a few simple rules by which the users of telephones may obtain quick and satisfactory service and avoid ruffled tempers and vexatious delays, Angus Hibbard, general manager of the Chicago Telephone Company, said if the following suggestions were closely followed by the public, the efficiency of the telephone service would be practically doubled:

1. If you wish to telephone anyone make the call yourself and remain with the telephone at your ear until answered by the person called, or until you find out that he cannot.
2. In answering a call give name of your firm or office. This immediately identifies you and the calling party proceeds with conversation. The immediate answer, "This is Jones & Co.; what is wanted?" saves a great deal of time.
3. Do not ask anyone to "hold the wire" if you know you are to be away from the instrument more than a minute or two.
4. When your bell rings answer your telephone just as quickly as possible. The person calling you is waiting at the other end of the line and both your line and his are busy to all callers when they are connected.
5. Do not go to the telephone with "a chip on your shoulder" and address the operator in a tone of voice you never think of using in speaking to any of your own employees. Be courteous.

Would Not Suffer So Again for Fifty Times Its Cost.

I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me all right. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be without it in my house hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H.
