THE MAN ON FOOT.

mboul He Has No Rights as Against the Horseman.

In finished IR idea No Rights as Agalast the Horseman.
One of the peculiarities in Stamboul is the insolent demeanor of the horseman to the peculiarities in Stamboul is the insolent demeanor of the horseman to the footman. Many times daily you will see some rascal of a cabman trying to drive down a well dressed man on the street. The drivers rarely take the trouble to shout as they approach pedestrians. I was often filled with worder and the street. The drivers rarely take the trouble to shout a foot submitted by such treatment from shabily Turks on carriage boxes. Even when no injury was done to such a pedestrian, he was often bespeatered with mud. Stamboul must be an unpleasant place in which to like. Were cahmen in our country to treat pedestrians as reclusesly theey would be imany cases of assault and buttery, and I then the stambal to the stambal the driver, and it is shown as a walking stick. A carriage suddenly dashed down on him, and its driver, after nearly running over him, hurled at him a volley of what sounded like choice Turkish abuse. The unformed Turk retorted not. He scraped the mud off his uniform, stuck hape the country as man with a saber would have used it on the driver's back. By this I do not mean that the Turks are lacking in spirit—far from it, but apparently it would seem to be the custom of the country that the man on foot, as against the man on horselack, has no rights.—"A Levanthe Log Book." by Jerone Hart.

Calling Back Stage Art.

The spectacle of the Russian play actors now performing in the chief cities of the country should teach Americans to refuse to regard the ex-ploiting of personality as the art of acting. It is the A B C of the stage. acting. It is the A B C of the stage, but this generation has yet to learn it. A very large class of intelligent people no longer attend the theater, not only because the average play is silly or un-interesting, but because the acting no interesting, but because the acting no longer creates the illusion of reality. More than any other art, the art of acting must "hold the mirror up to nature." Our popular stars hold the mirror up to themselves. With these Russian players the drama and the art to interpret it are the real thing. Beside their sernest effort to place the dramatist and his necesses show the artor, our exploits.

effort to place the dramatist and his message above the actor, our exploits tion of vain and physically attractive "stars" becomes a hollow sham. Na-tive managers and native playwrights deal in personalities; the Russians offer characters with something to say.
