The Senate in Bession.

The Senate in Bession.

When a motion is made and carried in the United States senate that the senate "proceed to the consideration of executive business." the galleries are cleared, the doors are closed, and a secret senation begins. "Executive business" is that in which the assent of the senate is necessary to the acts of the president, the chief executive, such as treaties and nominations to office. It has become customary, states Youth's Companies, to call a secret senates and committees have adopted the phrase, and now almost any meetings behind closed ucors is incorrectly called an "executive session." The wisdom of attempting secrety in certain deliberations of the senate is apparent. In discussing the fitness of the president sejections for office, many facts can be brought out in private conference which should not be apread on the records and sent broadcast over the country. Senators would not speak as freely as they ought if these we've the conditions. Whatever "leaks" out is unofficial. But it is in the consideration of treates that the secret session is most necessary. A president often has reasons for the dooption of a certain policy, which would be upset if all the world knew the secret as a secret in the secret as a secret in the secret assumes the continues of the world knew would be upset if all the world knew would be upset if all the world knew would be upset if all the world knew world kne secret session is most necessary. A president often has reasons for the adoption of a certain policy, which would be upset if all the world knew what these were. To this day the motives which were really behind the acquisition of Alaska remain somewhat in dispute. Even in the frankness characteristic of modern diplomacy, many nations might decline to continue a compact if they had heard all the advantages to the United Slates that might be claimed for it id secret session. During the civil war both houses adopted a rule under which, on the president's request, communications in regard to military movements or the conduct of the war could be discussed in secret session. All the sessions of the senate in the first congress were evert, as if were those of the convention which draft-ed the federal constitution. Much of the important committee work of congress is still done behind closed doors. Everybody has secrets. The humblest family and the most powerful nation alike possess information the wide diffusion of which would occasionally be unwise, and more often unkind.

Money Stringency,
A. B. Hepburn, formerly comptroller

A. B. Hepburn, formerly comptroller of the United States currency, and now president of the Chase National bank, New York, discusses in the North American Review the "Cause of the Recent Money Stringency," Mr. Hepburn thinks that the stringency was caused by the fact that, while we have grown rich rapidly of late, the growth of business he received with the control of the contro grown rich rapidly of late, the growth of business has required added capital (which is different from currency) in volume exceeding our increased wealth. Says Mr. Hepburn: "Statis-tics show that 90 per cent. of all the business consummated through banks is done by means of checks and drafts." is done by means of checks and drafts. This auxiliary currency possesses per-fect elasticity, expands and contracts without let or hindrance, tax or super-vision, and responds to the demands of trade completely and perfectly. It has certainly expanded to meet the dehas certainly expanded to meet the de-mands of trade during the period un-der discussion. The only thing this auxiliary currency cowers before is distrust, and it necessarily contracts when credit is curralled. Optimism, and not distrust, has prevalled for sev-eral years past. Our currency, which at best does less than ten per cent. of the business of the country, is blamed for these abnormally high rates and congress is appealed to for legislative remedy. It is difficult to see how our currency (consummating less than ten per cent. of the business of the country) could be given suffi-cient elasticity to prevent a stringency is time of distrust or under conditions recently prevailing. With our curof the country) count be given sumcient elasticity to prevent a stringency is not the first occasion when our currency has been unjustly accused. Thefar west and southwest, surrounded by Legitimacy of 20,000 Children Is Affected by Decision of United Bates Supreme Court.

Washington.—It is doubtful if more momentous decision in the more momentous decision in the constitution of the more momentous decision in the pen delivered by the supreme court in recent years than when Monday, by a bench divided five to four, it held that divorces obtained in states which do not have jurisdiction over both parties to a marriage are not enforce-bale outside the state granting them. The decision is based on the clause of the constitution providing that each state shall give full faith and credit to the decrees of another state with the decrees of another state with the decrees of another state with the decrees of another state. The effect of the decision therefore is trained to the decrees and undoubtedly is a long step that the decrees and undoubtedly is had been believed could only be out-rected by a uniform divore law enact-ed by the federal congress. The general belief is that divorces will become less frequent as, when the purport of the decision becomes known generally, the movement in favor of national divorce laws will gain such force as to compel the passage of the constitutional amendment needed to effect such legislation. It is estimated that at least 20,000 children are affected by the opinion. These are the offspring of marriages based on divorces granted where but one of the parties resided in the state issuing the decree of separation.

Now we come to a frisky lot, the "Lobo" balon" editors.
