Missions and Massacres Are Related in China

Coppright, Eff. by Joseph B. Bowlen.)
Peking, China.—The most serious charge made against missionaries in China is that by their interference with civil law they exasperate the natives to the point of upstements the native to the point of upstements the relations of the gospel with being responsible for riot and nurder. Yet I regret to write that I find ground for this widespread criticism.

A look at the setting of the facts is first necessary. China huiting, helpless incompetent among the nations of the earth. She has never received the consideration due to a great country. Foreign powers have never trusted the lives of their subjects in her keeping; wherever they go, there goes the law of extra-territoristics. An alien in China is now but that of his own self-restraint or of his country's consultant.

s country's consulate. Every White Man a Nabob.

A foreigner can do pretty much as he pleases in China. Instead of being, as his friends at home imagine him to be, a terror-stricken mortal, momen-tarily arrial that the Chinese ogre-will demand his life, he is more neartarily arraid that the Conness offer will demand his life, he is more near-ly an ogre himself.

Bitter experience with armies and navies from over seas, and with the loss of territory selted as a pennity for injury to foreigners, has made Chinese officials fearful of these strangers. Every magatrate knows terness; and so also have men in the consular and diplomatic service. The Why of China's Latesif Massacra. Regardiess of public 'opinion, the French missionaries have pressed to the filhit their prerogatives. Columns could be written of the manner in which they have abused their power. Whole villages have been forcibly impressed to work for them. In the litterior, a few weeks ago, fran across head men of a village. At Nanchang they insisted on the punishment of two men whom the mayor had promised to protect; the latter, his "face" gone, wrought a dire Chinese reyenge by committing suicide in their church. Straightway an uprising followed in which an entirely unoffending British family was massacred, as well as the French prients, and all the foreigners in the place would have been slaughtered, had not a timely rain dispersed the mob.

For all such crimes the French demand exorbitant indemnities. The most criving of the French churches must be heavily atoned for. This applies not only to the national land-grabbing of France and Germany on account of missionary troubles, but also to petty neighborhood squabbles. A convert of the French priest is immune from the law of his own land He may be a nurdeere, a their, a rascal of any kind or degree; his church membership is an asylum, and the law cannot touch him. The missionary alone is his ludge. No outsider cas

The race question in the southern states is not half so serious as the race question in: Asia. The white man's sense of superiority to the yellow expresses itself in a harshness that would shock America were it widely known. If a ricktha man does not go fast enough, beat him with your sitch. A secretary of the American legation at Poling toil me as a look that the Assertant of the American legation at Poling toil me as a look that the Assertant of the American legation at Poling toil me as a look that the late of the American legation at Poling toil me as a look that the late of the American legation at Poling to the assert he way the Chinese are frequently abused by white men I no longer marvel at the anti-foreign feeling which resides in most native breasts. The wonder is that the Chinese have endured so men's within the foreigners are bound to respect. The present outcry saginst the white man in China has similar to think a type of the present outcry saginst the white man in China has mission. The hard the same to place a during the present outcry saginst the white man in China has missions to the same to the same provision was put into the document; but these do not necessarily concern the present diversion. wowed any intention or except them.

Not so the French. They have been the opening political seats, as have also, in some cases, the Germans. The French bishops travel in the full regalla of vicerys. When he goes out in his chair a bishop has outranners, I umbrellias, flags and all the other funnery of a Chiesee greenor. He demands to be received always in the state beditting his rank. Upon this point Chieses officials, his and low, have spoken to me with greatest hit-

Saxon's horizon.

Thus many an ardent young missionary has found that a sudden accession of inquirers has been due to the fact that the professed converse wanted him to take up their side of the fact that the profession of the varieth him to take up their side of a quarrel against members of the French church. To join the one church seemed to the Chinese the only recourse left to enable them to get justice from, or to get even with the members of the other. If the American missionary would not help them, as the French missionary helped his people, then his was the loss of "face" and following.

In these circumstances some missionaries have doublicasly appealed to consult on behalf of their people, in cases other than persecution; the treaties accord protection to the artist Christians when persecution on account of their religious faith, although this is a doubtful advantage.

When the Gospel Goes to Law. The net result of all this has been only trouble for all concerned. The missionaries have been caused end-less annoyance and at times serious difficulties. There is general agreement amount the Angio-Saxona that half of their Chinese members under the half of their Chinese members under that of their Chinese members under that of their Chinese members under that of their Chinese members under the missionaries of the chinese members under the chinese member make a peremptory ruling that mis-sionaries must not meddle with law cases, so that they could make this answer when appealed to. Certainly it is the conclusion of all impartial observers that it is gravely unwise for missionaries to attempt to infuence the course of Chinese civil and crim-laid administration, even when these inal administration, even when these are unjust.

So strongly do most missionaries now feel upon the subject that they remained the subject to the missionary church. "What shall I do?" saked the magistrate. "Clive him ten eatra lashes for tripia to deceive you and for attempting to promptly replied the young missionary. The general practice of the American missionaries, with only rare exceptions, is to permit their members to suffer injustice, rather than to incur the greater evil of bringing reproach upon the church's name, and of hindering the state from excepting its sovereign rights. Nevertheless, missionaries of come cases wherein American missionaries after the subject of the mandarias or to the consult on behalf of natives.

Robbing Mandarine of "Face."
The preeminent importance of "face" in China makes this sort of thing harder for a Chinese official to swallow than it would be for an Angio-Baxon, although the endurance of it on the part of the latter is an impossible hypothesis. Magistrates are thereby shore of prestige and power by the meddlessome foreigness or the part of the latter is an impossible hypothesis. Magistrates are thereby shore of prestige and power by the meddlessome foreigness processes in China are kagoched sky high. Thus, although most officials with whom I have talked clearly distinguish between French and American missionaries, there is undoubtedly a widespread hostility against all missionaries on the part of the official class. They associate, and not without reason, the loss of much of their territory with the missionary, preschooled in every missionary, to the Chinese mind, is the ever present possibility of complications with foreign powers. Small wonder the throne has recently been memorialized by the progressives for, a retrocession of extra-territorial rights.

Some courageous Chinese magistrate, it should be said, show their resentment against foreign interference by deciding against the missionary in the resent of the control of the sort of thing chiefly because of the moner and forman control of the control of the control of the control of the con

Washington. — Assistant Secretary of State Adee Monday night characterized as "an absurd canard" the report from San Francisco that Honduran land forces had captured the Port of Acajutia in the latter part of September after a battle with the army of Salvador. Mr. Adee said that Honduran shad a support of the army of Salvador. Mr. Adee said that Honduran and Salvador are on friendly terms and that no suggestion of trouble had renard that no suggestion of trouble had renard that the Washington covernment is in almost constant communication with the Central American powers concerned.

Minister Ugarte, of Honduras, said that he had had cable dispatches from his government Saturday in reagrd to the coming peace conference to be held here by representatives of the Central American republics and that, no mention was made of any difficulty at Acajutia. The ministers from Guatemais and Salvador are, likewise without advices in any sense confirmatory of the reports from San Francisco.
