The following communication addressed to G. W. Spunner, president, was read.

"I beg to call your attention to condition of the creek running into my farm and into which is emptied the city sewage. This has gotten into a condition which makes it dangerous to the health of the people living on the farm and also the water is not fit for use of the animals to drink. Something should be done to take care of this matter and I should be glad to hear from you as to what your ideas are regarding this.

Yours Very Truly,

H. S. HART.

Trustee Dodge moved that the clerk be instructed to communicate with Mr. Hart to the effect that the village expected to take care of this matter soon as possible.

The board of local improvements recommended the extension of Russell street and presented an ordinance for same which was adopted and is published in this issue of this paper.

Wealth is Distributed.

Chief Statistician of Census Bureau Writes on "The Assets of the United States."

The nation's wealth is not in the hands of a few, according to H. D. Powers, chief statistician of the census bureau at Washington.

Writing on "The Assets of the United States" in the September number of the American Journal of Sociology, he said recently from the University of Chicago press, Mr. Powers has the following to say of the concentration of wealth in America:

"If we start with the value of farms and other homes which are known to be owned by men of small possessions, the savings bank deposits and other known possessions of those of moderate means, and then add the lowest popular estimates of the possessions of our millionaires, we have an aggregate far in excess of the census appraisal of national wealth, and the conclusion under such circumstances is irresistible either that the census estimates are ridiculously small or the popular estimates of the wealth of our millionaires are greatly exaggerated."

The writer does not add any evidence that would justify either statement that our national wealth is grossly understated or that our millionaires own so large a share of that wealth as to leave the great majority without property."

A Shining Mark.

A lady, grievously tormented with a corn on her toe, was advised by one of her friends to anoint it with phosphorus, which in a week moment she did, but forgot to tell her husband before retiring at night. It had just turned 12 when the husband awoke and was startled to see something sparkling at the foot of the bed. He had never heard of a fire in the locality, nor did he ever remember seeing such a terrible looking object as the one presented. Reaching carefully out of bed till he found one of his slippers, he raised it high in the air and brought it down with great force upon the mysterious light.

A shriek and an avalanche of bed clothes and all was over. When at last he released himself from the bed clothes he discovered his wife groaning in a corner of the bedroom, but she had not got rid of that phosphorous corn.

Tortuous Statutory Indictments.

Suppose an old woman steals a hog of mutton. If the indictment merely says that she stole it she must be acquitted. It must further state that she said hog of mutton did steal and carry away," even though, in fact, she was caught before she had time to do anything of the kind.

If Smith assaults Jones it is not enough for the indictment to say so or even that he "did beat, wound and ill treat" him. It must say all these things and also that "said Smith divers other wrongs to the said Jones then did."

Finally, if Smith shoots Jones and is guilty enough not to kill him the appropriate indictment must not only describe the shooting and the wounds, but must be careful to allege that the gun "was then and there loaded with gunpowder and divers leaden bullets."

ROOSEVELT HOT SHOT.

On Haskell. Governor Haskell's utter indifference for any public position of trust or for association with any man anxious to make an appeal on a moral issue to the American people has been abundantly shown.

As an American citizen who prides on his Americanism and citizenship far above any question of partisanship, I regard it as a scandal and disgrace that Governor Haskell should be connected with the management of a national campaign.

In my judgment the measures you advocate would be wholly ineffective in curing an evil, and so far as they had any effect at all would merely show the selfishness of the country into hopeless and utter confusion.

I put Mr. Taft's deeds against you words. I ask that Mr. Taft be judged by all his deeds, for he wishes none of them forgotten. I ask that you be judged both by the words you wish remembered and by the words that seemingly you and your party now desire to have forgotten.

Supposed on First Anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. James Leonard of Geneva Lake, Wisconsin, who have been visiting relatives here during the past week, were given a party at the home of Mrs. Leonard's sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Kirby, last Friday evening. The occasion was their first wedding anniversary. About thirty friends were present to "surprise" Mr. and Mrs. Leonard, who had been invited to pass the evening with Mrs. Kirby. They did not arrive until nearly ten o'clock and the question arises as to who the surprise was on. However, a pleasant evening was passed. Refreshments were served.

Entertainment Twice a Week. The entertainments given at the village hall Saturday evening and Tuesday evening by Robert Bennett and Walter R. Scates were so well attended that the boys have decided to give an entertainment twice a week hereafter, on Tuesdays and Saturdays.

The program, which consists of moving pictures and illustrated songs, will be commenced at 7:30 and repeated at 8:45. Change of program every evening. A good way to spend a pleasant hour.

Farewell Party. Miss Louise Boehmer was given a surprise party at the club house opposite the ball park last evening. About sixty friends were present and enjoyed a pleasant evening playing games. The party was given in the nature of a farewell, Miss Boehmer leaving with her parents soon for Wheeling. The club house and grounds were decorated with autumn leaves and flags, presenting a pretty scene. Refreshments were served. The promoters were Misses Laura Boehmer, Lucilla Landwehr Landwehr and Myrtle Pligge.

An Instructive Lecture. Dr. John R. Reitzel spoke at the M. E. church Tuesday evening on "The Devil and the Turk in his own Country," as advertised. The doctor maintained his reputation as a traveler and story teller. The lecture was amusing, pathetic and instructive, in fact one in imagination could see the Turks in their public and home life. To those who cannot visit foreign countries such lectures are very welcome, entertaining, instructive and are highly appreciated.

If you wish to rent or sell your home advertise in the REVIEW's business notice column and you will find an interested party.

BY ORDER BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

A New Club. "The Town of Clubs" has yet another.

We have clubs and clubs, and then some more. The men have clubs; the women have clubs; the boys have clubs; and not to be outdone, the young ladies must have clubs.

Six of Barrington's dainty young ladies have formed a club, with the very appropriate title of "The Girl Question Club." The members are: Misses Mabel Peck, Florence Colten, Beatrice Bennett, Madeline Dickes, Francis Dulan and Fay Lawson.

The first meeting of the club was held Friday evening, September 25th. Meetings will be held at the home of a member every Friday evening.

The "Girl Question" (whatever that is) is indeed a serious one, but we hope among the girls which make the question, will be able to solve it.

We look forward to the honor, and the pleasure, of chronicling the important decisions reached by the members of "The Girl Question Club."

MORE GOULD CASE BRIBERY

HOTEL EMPLOYE TOLD PRIEST OF BEING OFFERED $2,000.

Wife Submits Affidavit Defending Herself Against Charge of Drunkenness Made by Husband.

New York. — That $2,000 had been offered an employee of the Hotel St. Regis to give false testimony against Mrs. Howard Gould was the substance of an affidavit, purporting to have been made by Rev. Father Joseph G. Murray, which was presented to Justice Giegerich in the supreme court Friday.

The case came up before the justice on a motion to strike out certain allegations in Mrs. Gould's complaint in her suit for a separation from her husband, as scandalous and irrelevant. Mrs. Gould's counsel opposed the motion and presented several affidavits in which it was charged that certain witnesses had been hired to testify in favor of Mr. Gould. The affidavit of Father Murray was one of the papers presented. It declares that Michael H. Doody had told the priest that while he was employed at the Hotel St. Regis, where Mrs. Gould lived, a detective went to him with the proposition that he "give a proper report of Mrs. Gould's conduct and goings at the hotel, the amount of wine she drank and the names of her visitors, notably those of them that were men."

Another affidavit, sworn to by Maurice Molloy, alleges that Molloy was under contract, while custodian of Castle Gould at Port Washington, to treat Mrs. Gould in a contemptuous fashion. The lawyer for Mrs. Gould recited how it was alleged that Molloy had given her a bottle of wine and a glass of champagne. "We were always accustomed to have wine served at these meals, but that was the extent of my drinking."

An affidavit submitted by Mrs. Gould in reply to allegations by her husband that she is addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, says:

"While living in the country and spending most of my time in the open air, I have drunk a cocktail on sitting down to luncheon, and generally a glass of white wine with luncheon. At dinner, whenever I felt like it, I drank a cocktail and a glass of champagne. We were always accustomed to have wine served at these meals, but that was the extent of my drinking."

The other members of the party, Mr. Drink, Mr. and Mrs. Bush and Mrs. Tenbroeck, all of Grand Rapids, escaped with slight injuries.

Can't Take Liquor from Depot.
Lawton, Okla. — It is a violation of the prohibition law for a train man or any other person to convey liquor from the railroad depot. Wolverton of the county court, announced in a liquor case here Wednesday.

HURRICANE HITS MANILA

BAY IS SWEEPED FOR HOURS BY TREMENDOUS STORM.

Battleships Uninjured by the Fierce Gale and Heavy Seas—Damage Done Ashore.

Manila.—The Atlantic battleship fleet has safely outridged a hurricane which swept Manila bay for 12 hours and did much damage ashore.

Typhoon signals were displayed early Sunday morning, but the storm broke over the bay suddenly and unexpectedly at noon. It was impossible to bolt the cutters and launches belonging to the fleet because of the danger of smashing them against the steel sides of the battleships, and the little craft were sent scurrying inside the breakwater into the Paig river, where they remained all night.

The storm quickly increased in intensity and the torrid rains shut in the ships.

At eight o'clock Sunday night the storm had reached its height and it then gradually tapered down until at midnight it was comparatively calm, although heavy seas swung across the harbor.

During the storm all the battleships had steam up ready for any emergency. Rear Admiral Sperry, recently ordered the flagship Connecticut and the Kansas, Minnesota, Vermont, Virginia and Ohio under way, and they were close to Cavite, where they anchored.

At times the wind blew at the rate of 100 miles an hour. All communications with shore were cut off. It was impossible during the height of the storm to see the warships through the haze of rain and spray.

Manila.—Lieut. Frank Taylor Evans of the battleship Louisiana and Lieut. Charles Burt of the battleship Georgia, will be tried before a special court.

The charges against them will be that they were guilty of insubordination on the battleship Wisconsin Monday.

The charges against Lieut. Evans are for being absent from his station while acting as chief of the deck, using profane and disrespectful language to a superior officer and for being guilty of insubordination.

The charges against Lieut. Burt are for "conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman."

Lieut. Evans denies the charge of insubordination and says that he will offer the testimony of a number of witnesses to prove that he has been sober and quite fit for duty.

Carload of Abandoned Children.
St. Paul, Minn.—A carload of 60 bright-looking boys and girls from New York reached St. Paul Wednesday.

The unusual consignment was made up of children who had been deserted by their parents and had been sheltered in the founding hospital of the metropolis. They are being taken to the Dakotas, where homes have been found for them among the farmers. On their arrival here about 25 of the children were transferred to a St. Louis coach to be taken to points along the road to North Dakota.

Mormons for "Dry" Legislation.
Salt Lake City.—Having heard the revelation of the words of wisdom which prohibits the use of all intoxicants by the faithful, 15,000 members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints Sunday proclaimed their faith in the practical application of the ecclesiastical law by voting unanimously approval of a resolution pledging the entire membership of the church to support prohibition legislation. The occasion was the opening of the seventy-seventh annual conference.

Col. Marcy Burned to Death.

Winthrop, Me.—The new St. Boniface cathedral, erected at a cost of $800,000, was dedicated Sunday afternoon in the presence of a great array of prelatic and clergy.

TWO LARGE HOTELS BURNED.

Fire Sweeps Summer Resort Near Boston.

Boston.—Two of the largest hotels, Cresthall and the Ocean View house, and three valuable summer cottages were destroyed by fire here early Saturday with a loss estimated at more than $150,000.

Mrs. A. C. DuMont of Cincinnati, who was a guest at Cresthall, was reported by the police as missing and men waited for the ruins to cool so that they could be searched. There were nearly 100 guests in the two hotels and many had narrow escapes. Few persons were able to save any of their property, as the hotel buildings were practically burned to the ground.

Cresthall was owned by Fred Hall and the Ocean View by Mrs. L. B. O'Brien. Fifty guests at Cresthall and 20 at the Ocean View were aroused, and all but one are known to have made their escape before the fire reached them. Some from the Ocean View were able to save part of their effects.

The fire started at midnight in the kitchen of Cresthall. A strong north-west wind swept the flames directly down the beach and only the timely arrival of aid from Boston, Chelsea and Everett, prevented a large part of the valuable ocean front from destruction.

OPPOSE DR. KOCH'S THEORY.
Experts Dislike His Human-Bovine Idea.

Washington.—Pronounced opposition to the theory advanced by Dr. Robert Koch, the eminent German scientist, who maintains the danger of human infection from bovine tuberculosis, and who declares that the tubercle bacilli of bovine tuberculosis are different from those of human tuberculosis, developed itself Friday's session of the international congress on tuberculosis. The congress was held in London.

The "Prevalence and Economics of Tuberculosis of Animals," and the "Prevalence and Economics of Tuberculosis of Animals," were completed by some of the most prominent veterinary physicians in the United States. Leaders in the opposition to the Koch theory were Dr. Otto G. Noack of Reading, Pa.; Dr. Arthur Hughes of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.; Dr. H. R. Reynolds of the University of Minnesota, and Veranus A. Moore of Illinois, N. Y.

Big Strike Has Collapsed.
Winnipeg, Man.—Indications are that the Canadian Pacific railroad men's strike has collapsed. Bell Canada's strike has been conducted by the men from Montreal, arrived in this city Tuesday to confer with Vice President Whyte, and if possible arrange for the men to be taken back.

It is understood that a message was received from the International Labor Federation at Washington advising the men to approach the company immediately with a view to going back.

Pittsburg Has $500,000 Fire.
Pittsburg.—An explosion of gas at the plant of the Pittsburg Plate Glass company's works, No. 2, at Tarentum, a suburb, early Sunday resulted in a loss by fire of $500,000 and threw 800 men out of employment.

Long a watchman, was knocked down by the explosion, bruised and internally injured. Half of the plant is in ruins and the flames were only checked by a large steel building recently erected by the company.

Big Blaze at Winthrop Beach.
Boston.—A brick fire broke out in the summer colony at Winthrop Beach at 11:30 o'clock Friday night. Crest Hall, a summer hotel accommodating 75 guests, and the Ocean house were soon in flames, and a large number of cottages near by were threatened.

Illinois Banker Is Indicted.
Peoria, Ill.—James W. Quinn, owner of a private bank at Peoria, Ill., was indicted Friday on ten counts for receiving deposits after he knew the bank was insolvent.

BULGARIANS CAST OFF THE YOKE OF TURKEY

Independence Proclaimed with Ferdinand as Their Czar—Austria Annexes Bosnia and Herzegovina—Two Events May Provoke Sultan to War.

London.—In the ancient capital of Tirnovo the independence of Bulgaria was proclaimed Monday, with the czar of the Bulgarians as a ruler. Czar of the Bulgarians is recognized to mean more than czar of Bulgaria, because it is a distinct intimation that he regards his country as having sovereignty over all the people of that blood in the east.

Within a day or two Austria-Hungary, which has been working with Prince Ferdinand in this preconcerted plan, will proclaim the new status of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The question, which has been stirring the whole of Europe more deeply than any similar question in the memory of the present generation is, does it mean war? From all the capitals come reports indicating that it means, first of all, another European congress of the signers of the treaty of Berlin to consider the situation and probably to revise the treaty.

Turkey May Avoid War.
Turkey, caught in a moment of weakness, has been the victim of this situation, and while some internal animosities have been stirred up, probably no power is willing to make war. Reports from the emancipated Turkish press to London indicate that the "Young Turks" will swallow this bitter pill as best they can and, for that, naturally the Bulgarians, while willing and eager for war, will have no cause on which to base the beginning of hostilities.

From the British standpoint the whole affair has been a surprise, and more than a surprise, because for the first time in years the British government felt itself with apparently a perfect understanding with France and Russia and complete friendship with Italy, to be in a position where it dominated European politics, reserving out of this consideration the almost open enmity between itself and Germany.

Great Britain's Warning.
Probably never in the history of Europe have politics taken such amazingly kaleidoscopic revolutions as during the past week. An entangling situation will come when the signatories of the Berlin treaty meet to consider what action shall be taken regarding the violations of the treaty. Great Britain Monday night served notice that it does not recognize the right of any of the parties to this treaty to violate its provisions, without consulting the other signatories.

The English diplomats know that the conference will resolve itself into a scramble among the powers to get what is termed in European parlance "compensation" for the advantages which Austria, backed by Germany, has already obtained.

The official statement issued by the British foreign office says that "His majesty's government cannot admit the right of any power to alter an international treaty without the consent of the other parties to it. It therefore refuses to sanction any infringement of the Berlin treaty and denounces the action of Austria-Hungary which has been taken to nullify the views of the other powers are known, especially those of Turkey, which is more directly concerned than anyone else."

France Also for Peace.
The chances of war between Bulgaria and Turkey are being minimized by Great Britain and France, who are working together and who have advised Turkey against it. Turkey apparently is disposed to follow this advice, and it is believed that if hasty action on the part of Turkey can be prevented, Bulgaria will have difficulty in finding an excuse to begin war.

The action of Prince Ferdinand in proclaiming the independence of Bulgaria is condemned alike by the governments of Europe, but in some quarters this is considered a matter of minor importance, so long as it does not result in war, as compared with the threatened annexation of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austria-Hungary.

Belgrade, Serbia.—The news of Austria-Hungary's action with regard to the annexation of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina has caused a great excitement in the city. The streets are thronged with a wild mob, many of the rioters discharging their revolvers and demanding war with Austria rather than annexation.

Mediation by France.
Paris—France has essayed the role of mediator with the object of preventing war between Turkey and Bulgaria, and as a result of Foreign Minister Pichon's series of conferences Monday with the representatives of the powers, including M. Lowinsky, the Russian foreign minister; Naoum Pash, the Turkish ambassador at Paris; the Austro-Hungarian, the Italian, the American and the Italian ambassadors, and of active exchanges of views, have been going on between the various cabinets. It was announced that France, Great Britain, Russia and possibly Italy were prepared to act in union to preserve peace and to call a conference of the signatories of the Berlin treaty to deal diplomatically with the situation that has arisen between Turkey and Bulgaria and to harmonize conflicting interests so that fresh complications may be avoided.

Bulgarians Want War.
The danger of war is believed to be in precipitate action by Constantinople. The "Young Turks" party, which may fear a blow at its prestige if it acquiesces in the loss of Bulgaria, and by the military party, which wants to restore the old order of things. It is feared that Turkey, although ill-prepared both from a financial and military standpoint, may proclaim war. Should this be the case, the efforts of the powers will then be directed to limiting the war to Bulgaria and Turkey.

According to information received here Bulgaria would welcome war, as the Bulgarians are in Constantinople before the Turkish forces could be mobilized.

The view is also held here that there has been a double move on the part of Bulgaria and Austria-Hungary. These two countries acting together, and that Germany and Russia have advised of it in advance. Russia also received an intimation of the plan, but it fully into the secret and in some respects was misled.

Troops Moving to Frontier.
The troops have been ordered to a dispatch from Vienna saying that the Bulgarian army is marching toward the frontier and that the Turks also are moving forward to the encounter. Austria-Hungary is mobilizing two army corps.

Bulgaria Declares Independence.
Sofia, Bulgaria.—Bulgaria, a tributary principally under the suzerainty of the sultan of Turkey, Monday proclaimed her independence of Turkey. This action was taken at Tirnovo by Prince Ferdinand, who was elected prince of Bulgaria in 1887. The Bulgarian cabinet was held at Tirnovo last Sunday at the frontier and journeyed with him to Tirnovo.

The proclamation was made at the cathedral of Tirnovo at 11 o'clock Monday. It was a dramatic scene, accompanied by much enthusiasm. The texts of independence addressed to the nation was subsequently issued by the prince.

Tirnovo is the ancient capital of the kingdom of Bulgaria, and it was there in the olden days that the kings of Bulgaria were crowned.

Prince Ferdinand has telegraphed to the Turkish government that he was compelled to respect the voice of the nation, and hoped that the friendly relations between the two countries would continue. Turkey's reply, which is being prepared, refuses to recognize Bulgaria's independence.

Obesity's Problem

Condition of Being Too Fat and Its Remedy

By DR. MARCEL LABBE.

OBESITY, or pronounced fatness, is a disease, and there is no controverting the fact that men and women are themselves responsible for allowing surplus adipose tissue to wreck their happiness and health and ruin their opportunities in life.

The doctor, if he is a good one, can only tell them that obesity arises from two specific causes, namely, overfeeding and under-exercising. In the case of most of them the doctor learns that the patient eats much and frequently because of a horror he has of suffering physical injury from hunger and its pains.

The proper treatment of obesity is founded on the physiological mechanism of obesity itself. Since obesity is accounted for by an excess of feeding receipts over the expenditure of energy, in the budget of the organism, the remedy is pretty obvious, namely, first to diminish the feeding receipts, and, secondly, to increase the expenditure of energy, in order to decrease the amount of adipose tissue. But again, there is one very important part of any proposed remedy to consider: You must have character enough to forego your old self-indulgence. Every form of dissipation predisposes the body to the disease of fatness. Indulgence in drinking weakens the muscular fiber and makes it so flabby or loose that the adipose matter creeps into the interstices. Over-indulgence in Turkish or hot baths predisposes the system to flesh-gathering in exactly the same way. Cold baths, on the other hand, by robbing the body of its heat diminish the superfluous grease in the system and so solidify the general texture of the frame.

However, there is no denying it, the best thing is to avoid fatness, if you can. In order to do this there is needed character enough to dispense with all things that tend to weaken the body, and to eat and drink only what is necessary.

The Malady of the Age

By WOODROW WILSON,
President of Princeton University.

Look about you with candid eye and you shall find that the malady of the age is lack of individual courage, lack of individual integrity of thought and action. We need not speak of other countries or sweep a whole age into our generalization. Let us confine our view to our own day and our own country. What is the law of life in America now? Is it that every man should form his own moral judgments and speak them fearlessly, that every man should seek to govern his own life and square it with his own independent moral judgments? Of course there never has been a time or a society in which the individuals emerged from the mass in notorious multitudes and the air was quick with active independence. It has always been the exceptional individual here and there who asserted his own rights of conscience and took command of his own conduct. Does America to-day show a large or a small proportion of such men? That is the ultimate test of vitality.

Initiation is not for the strong, but for the weak; not for the individual, but for the mass. If initiation has become the law of our life, for the strong as well as for the weak, then are we indeed impoverished, and a time of decline is at hand.

A democratic country, more than any other, needs for its enrichment, for its growth, for that variation which is life, men by the score, the hundred, the thousand, who have indomitable intellectual and moral initiative. It needs more than that; it needs men by the hundred thousand who will not submit to be put in the wrong, who will not sell their conscience, who will not run with the crowd out of craven fear and in despite of their convictions. And where shall we get such men if not from the colleges, if not from amongst you who know the truth, if you would but follow it? You have sold your birthright when you have sold your independence of moral judgment.

No doubt business looks impersonal, but it is not so. And even if it were so, what release of conscience would that bring us? We judge our selves singly, die with the flavor of but one career on our palates, are laid away in our graves by neighbors who have known the man, not the corporation of which he formed a part.

And why do I speak only of the end? Do we judge ourselves only on our death beds? Do our neighbors assess us only at our funerals? Is the daily conduct of life not a daily process of judgment, the assessment of satisfaction or deep disappointment? And is not the daily conduct of life a thing wholly of individual contribution? What laws of nature govern our moral lives, except the laws operative in our own wills? Let every man find himself and see to the integrity of his own soul. "Let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous." And you are not to be deceived about other men; only when you do righteous are you righteous. It is a stern code, but it is the only sufficient one; and its stern definiteness makes many things clear.

Harem Women Are Happiest

yet, such is fate! I, the most restless of women, have married a man the most reposeful in the world, one tethered to a stone! He is a sculptor. Yet I am happy, and for this home life I have determined after the present expedition to give up all thoughts of vorages.

FARMER DOESN'T SEEM INTERESTED.

REPLIES TO BRYAN

MR. TAFT MAKES NEW TURN IN CANVASS.

People to Judge Between Man of Accomplishment and One of Absurd Promises and Exploited "Parasites."

The most effective statement yet made in the present campaign is that of Mr. Taft, in reply to Mr. Bryan's criticism of the Roosevelt letter relating to the Republican nominee. This statement marks a new turn in the canvass. It may be said that Mr. Taft has finally struck his gait. From this time on there will be something doing, when Mr. Taft discusses Mr. Bryan.

There is no possibility that the present campaign will be marked by unseemly personalities. Both candidates are men of clean characters. But in the absence of great, dominating issues the personalities of the candidates, and especially their records—the one as a performer and the other as a theorist—will play an unusually important part in the campaign.

Mr. Bryan has forced the fighting from the first. He has done his utmost to discredit the record and the pledges of the Republican candidate. He has gone out of his way to belittle what others have said of the achievements of Mr. Taft. Finally Mr. Taft has replied with a broadside that will give Mr. Bryan something to think about for a few days.

All this was both interesting and illuminating. The people like a spirited presidential canvass. They like good fighters. Mr. Taft is a good fighter and he is an honest fighter. In this particular encounter, Mr. Bryan not Mr. Taft, will be put on the defensive.

Mr. Taft's life has been full of life and accomplishment. He has a record that he may confidently submit to the people. Ordinarily a man who has no official record is at an advantage in a political contest, provided he can make the people believe his promises. But the majority has never believed in Mr. Bryan's promises, and the explosion and abandonment of his several paramount issues of the past are not calculated to increase public confidence.

In this beginning of the real Taft-Bryan contest the first thing that Mr. Taft has done has been to call the attention of the spectators to the nature of the fighting methods. It is to be hoped that in the future Mr. Bryan will be as fair as Mr. Taft has been. The public likes an honest observance of the rules of the game—Kansas City Star.

Richard Olney.
Richard Olney declares for Mr. Bryan. He is not, however, a new recruit. He was regular in 1900 on the issue of imperialism. He is regular this year on what are called general principles. He sees great dangers to the country from longer Republican rule, tending, as he thinks it does, to centralization and a cloud of office. His remedy is the election of Mr. Bryan, which would be followed by other Democratic triumphs, and so in time would be accomplished the rescue of affairs from Republican control. Mr. Olney's letter is probably intended as an offset to Mr. Cleveland's letter advising support of Judge Taft. Is the live Olney more powerful than the dead Cleveland? He is the fourth member of the second Cleveland cabinet to throw his support to Mr. Bryan. Judge Harmon, Hoke Smith and David R. Francis have been in camp for weeks.

Only "time-tests" of the Republican farmers," according to Mr. Bryan, "are with the Democrats on public questions." Is Mr. Bryan running his legs off and working his chin day and night for the purpose of converting the remaining one-tenth?

"Bryan will make a good president," says an exchange. "Might," you mean, neighbor, "might."

OLD FRIEND IN CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Bryan Comes to the Front with a Familiar Note.

When Mr. Bryan at Wilmington charged the steel trust with financing Taft, he sounded a familiar note. He did the expected. We feared that this was to be a campaign without a bogey; that, possibly, the Commoner's invasion has suffered from overstrain. We are glad our fears are unfounded; that there is no impairment of his imaginative faculties.

Of course, it does not matter that this latest product of Mr. Bryan's fertile imagination has no existence in fact. That is aside the point. It is sufficient for his purposes that it fits into his theories. He has always been a great theorizer. He is the only man who has a specific for every social ill. But the people, for some reason, have not shared his confidence in their effectiveness. His promises were too vague, too uncertain, and, besides, he changed them so often. For instance, one of Mr. Bryan's theories is that the United States Steel corporation has been accorded immunity against return of its promised to finance the Republican campaign. Here we have the characteristic Bryan argument, for upon analysis this charge resolves itself into merely an expression of opinion. He presents no proof. Mr. Bryan knows this. But he hopes by vehement gestures, by seeming earnestness, to so befuddle his hearers that they will believe that expressions of opinion are synonymous with statements of fact. Such methods are transparent to be convincing; they defeat their own purpose. But Mr. Bryan does not realize it. He is sincere in his beliefs, and he is ready to meet what he cannot carry confidence. And that is something Mr. Bryan has never inspired.

Republicans and Prosperity.
Under this head the extremely Republican St. Louis Globe-Democrat speaks of the prosperity placards which Mr. Kern emphasized and says because they would give the Democrats a chance to cry blackmail they are unwelcome. But it adds:

"The story which they tell is true. The election of Bryan would be a calamity to the country, even though it should be accomplished by his hands. A Bryanite victory would send down American stocks on every bourse in the world in which they were bought and sold, and would be a blow at American intelligence, as well as at American financial credit. Shares of all sorts on our own exchanges would immediately drop. Those big orders for railroads and general railway equipment which are said to be held out until after the election should be withdrawn indefinitely. Messrs. Bryan and Kern may rally at these conditions, but the things which have cast discredit upon them and their party are known to all the world, and neither their entreaties nor their imprecations will alter the situation in the slightest degree."

Denunciation of Little Value.

It is well that the growth of federal expenditures in our rapidly growing country should be subject to searching and persistent scrutiny, so that abuses may be extricated and extravagance banished. But the denunciations of the last session over the ruthless way in which Speaker Cannon slaughtered the expectations of members and appropriations down to the lowest possible limit was one of the laudable ambitions of the speaker and the senate leaders. Honest and pertinent criticism, as we have said, is necessary and wholesome; but not much benefit can be derived by Mr. Bryan or his party by loose and reckless denunciation of extravagance where little if any extravagance can be shown to exist.

Not so much as a whisper comes from Mr. Bryan charging that anybody has stolen the free silver thunder of his first campaign. And yet the whole armament rocked and reverberated with his racket about the necessity of going into free silver to save the country from everlasting ruin. Foxy Mr. Bryan, to forget the big end of his thunder.

The Art of Looking Pleasant.

A school recently opened in New York for the training of department store clerks. Will lay stress upon the art of looking pleasant and even smiling when a customer approaches the counter. This disposition, or faculty, as it may be, of greeting life everywhere with a smile, is the best equipment the beginner can have in any field of work. To our bustling age, wanting everything done quickly, we may have lost sight of the art of smiling. The doing and the finishing give happiness. To take it all for granted makes life dull plodding, and the art of looking pleasant is worthy of an endowed chair in schools of practical culture.

Success may be won by smiles. But if there is nothing much to gain it is better to face every turn of fortune with cheerfulness. In the age of chivalry the knight met death with a smile. It was part of his knightly training. With smiles on the journey through life will go a dozen little courtesies too often neglected. Kindness and luck of fortune are seldom met, and the best way to show one's real sentiments is through little courtesies—first the pleasant smile and then the thoughtful act which sends the smile home.

Positive proof that the gambling bank at Monte Carlo must always win at the end of each year is not in effect in stopping the hands of those who throw away their money there. The gambler believes in luck of the hour and hopes to win when the luck of the bank goes against it.

Scientific sanitation, wholesome food, orderly living, regard for others by persons infected and vigilance on the part of family physicians, these are the simple and available agencies for the prevention of the spread of tuberculosis.

Three great South American republics are adding to their sea power. If there is anything in the notion that big navies are peace-makers the world can rest in peace at this new outbreak of militarism.

President Roosevelt wants to do a turn in Wright's aeroplane, but perishes the thought that he intends giving African lions the unfair deal of shooting them in the back from an airship.

Homeing the Exiles of Eris.

Appeals are being made to the countless wanderers from the Emerald Isle to return home and make the waste places of the fatherland glad again. The suggestion carries a strong appeal to sentiment. The Irish are inclined to resist the "could-so" occasionally, and a very few return there to pass their old age. But it is argued that the skill and resources which the Irish have acquired in foreign lands should rally to start a prosperity boom at home. Americans at least would not begrudge any property resulting to Ireland from the investment of money made in this country.

For every Irishman who may return and invest his money and skill in home enterprises this country would get at least two fresh immigrants in return. It is the sight of American money abroad, lending aid to the development of unimpaired opportunity, which kindles the storage of ocean steamers full. However, it is a question whether the Irish who come here now or who have come in the past are the kind which Ireland needs at the present. The fact that New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago have more Irish inhabitants than any four cities in Ireland would indicate that our citizens of Irish lineage take to city activities. These people have developed no large enterprises like the Germans and the Scandinavians. As proprietors they do not take to agriculture and other forms of enterprise that are the backbone of prosperity. Like the Jews, the Irish seem to prosper best in contact with other races. Their nature needs to be put to work upon. The idea of stopping Irish immigration to this country is a vain dream, and the effort to start a tide the other way would doubtless end in disappointment for the individuals involved as well as to Ireland, however great her needs.

The Hand of the Vandal in London.

It is said that when the structure immortalized by Dickens as "Pewee's Bench," which is about to be replaced by an office building, disappears there will be practically no landmark left of Dickens' London to interest the visitor. American tourists have long found the places described by Dickens among the things of interest in strolls through the older parts of the great city. Dickens often took his characters from real life, and he sometimes put real places in his books.

"Pewee's Bench" was a cheap lodging house in the neighborhood of Dickens' own home when he wrote "Oliver Twist." There in his wanderings he located Fagin, the master of the thieves' kitchen. Another neighborhood carefully described in "Little Dorrit" is that around the Marshalsea prison. In this region so many alterations have been made that, "said, the site of the prison itself cannot now be told to a certainty. Many of Dickens' characters are believed to have been drawn from persons he had seen and perhaps known in London. While they have long ceased to exist, the types which they represented remain and, even in the absence of old landmarks, still lend interest to the metropolitan scene.

The Cuban Masses.

The Cuban masses who have at last united upon a presidential ticket have never had a chance to give independent a real test upon the island. Calling themselves "Liberals," they have stood out for the widest distribution of benefits, whether these benefits took the shape of offices or of money voted for the soldiers who fought the revolution. In local matters the Liberals have usually divided their forces and been beaten by the better organized Conservatives.

The masses who adhere to the Liberal cause now are those who stirred up trouble for the late Palma administration and led to interference by the United States. Many observers of Cuban affairs assert that the name Liberal really covers all those on the "outside" in politics and that there is sure to be revolution whichever party is in power. The conservative party includes the business men, and it differs from the party of the people in one important particular. It prefers the continuance of United States control to the unchecked rule of the Cuban masses.

Wilmer's Escape.

By COLIN S. COLLINS.

Copyright, 1936, by Associated Literary Press.

Lake Hammond penitentiary had been built on an island in the lake when it took its name long before the campers discovered what a lovely place the lake was. At the time of its build, Hammond had been fifty miles from the nearest town of any size, and only a spur track ran down to the shore of the lake, connecting with the flat bottomed boat that ferried the freight cars over to the island. Now the south shore fairly bristled with camps and huge hotels. Even on the north the lake and the numerous little islands were dotted with white tents and weather stained log huts. The campers objected to the presence of the penitentiary, with its great gray barracks and its forbidding iron bars across the windows. That the penitentiary was the last of its kind in the situation. The permanent campers wished the prison removed that they might enjoy their three months in prison untroubled by the thought of a possible jail-brother.

No stone walls surrounded the island. Only here and there a guard hut dotted the white sand. The only building which had been built entirely about the island, really to shoot at any prisoner who might rashly try to escape. Few tried. It was a good two miles to the nearest shore, and in the winter the white expanse of ice made a lock ground against which a convict would become a fair target for the guards.

Nancy Barlow lived in her room in close to the wall and gave her hand to the prisoners silently working on the new wall. She would not, however, back, she knew, but she liked to believe that this sign from the world outside cheered them in their work. The guards all agreed to know her and the little white-faced motor boat. They presented arms with a grin as she sped past the wall, and Nancy had the feeling that they answered for the prisoners.

Her little room was the fastest boat on the lake, and she spent her days speeding up and down the placid surface. She had consumed vast quantities of petrol, but the outdoor life was bringing back the roses to her cheeks, and James Barlow would have run a pipe line to the lake if necessary to bring about that result. He had refused his consent to the marriage of Nancy and Fred, but he had given her his word when he saw how the girl had dropped. She was all he had left in the world, and he could not lose her too. It was as much this as a husband's selfishness on Wilmer's part that had led to his refusal, and could he have found Wilmer he would have reconsidered his determination.

But Wilmer had dropped from sight, and none of his old acquaintances knew what had become of him. Nancy had learned to handle a motor boat, but she could not swim. She had never, and her devotion to the boat was in part due to that fact. As she skulked the little craft among the channels he had dreamed she liked to dream day-dreams of the time when they two should share a boat again. No real was the imagined presence at times that she felt. Wilmer had never been a mistake, and there was no mistaking the face. She even fancied that she caught a gleam of recognition in his eyes, as he passed on his slim trend. She shut off the power and turned to look after the men in the striped suits. It came as a shock to her that Wilmer was wearing the stripes. She was certain that he had done nothing to deserve imprisonment. It must have been all a mistake, and she had been too stupid to know that you were in trouble? she demanded as the boat, once more under control, hummed toward the shore. "We would have helped you to get out, you know that, Fred."

"Only got here yesterday," he explained. "I was going to look you up after my escape, but it is a case of business first."

"You know the little car up on the mountain?" she asked. "I like for that, and I will bring you other clothes this afternoon."

"Your father might object to loaning his car to a convict," suggested Wilmer, with a laugh.

"I don't care whether he does or not," said Nancy bravely. "You are in trouble, and he will have to see you."

out of it. He has a lot of political influence, and he can get you a pardon."

"Then you do care?" asked Wilmer eagerly. "He told me that you said that you no longer cared for me, that you had asked him to dismiss me."

"And that was why you stayed away?" she asked.

Wilmer nodded an assent. Nancy's pretty lips made a white line where they were compressed together. She had not a little of the Barlow stock-borne.

"I don't care if you are a convict," she said bravely. "I love you, and I am going to marry you. I didn't want a man who ran away from a negative and didn't hold on to fight for the girl he wanted, but this puts things in a different light. I don't care what you did."

The boat had reached the shore, and without pausing to make reply, Wilmer leaped from the boat to the sand and rushed into the thicket. There was no word of farewell. Nancy's lips were a white line, but her face blushed as a moment later, Wilmer strode out of the thicket again just as the prison boats steamed up. To Nancy's surprise men from the boats rushed toward Wilmer and began to talk excitedly. However, they made no effort to seize him, and the prison guards remained contentedly in the boat smoking cigarettes and joking among themselves. Wilmer detached himself from the group and came toward Nancy.

"I am afraid you will recall me for not explaining the trick, but I didn't want to waste a film and I didn't want to be accused of your love. I am a convict only for today. Your father, among other pleasant things, reminded me of my life. To show that I did not do something I put my abilities as an amateur actor to use as the stage manager for a motion picture concern."

"And this was all one of those plays that are reproduced?" demanded Nancy in disgust.

"All except the part in the boat," was his reply. "That was not a part of the film as written. I did not dare dream of such an addition to the plot."

"To think of my trying to save you, and all the time you were laughing at me!"

"It was not laughing," assured Wilmer as he took her hand. "It was the bravest thing a woman ever did for the man she loved. You are not angry at me, are you, Nancy?"

Nancy looked into the earnest, pleading eyes.

"Did I not say though I were?" she demanded. "You play the rest of your little play and then you will be right with father. I'll be present to see that he gets things right this time, but you mustn't make a motion picture of it," she added playfully.

"I should say not," assented Wilmer. "Well, I'll play the stage this time. I'll play just my part."

Mr. Perkins did not often comment on his wife's dress or make suggestions, but one day he remarked at her so long and thoughtfully that she inquired if there was anything he did not like about her new gown.

"No, my dear," said Mr. Perkins hastily. "I was only thinking. That waist of yours seems to be so elaborate with the lace and all. Why not have a simpler mode of dress?"

"Why not, indeed?" said Mrs. Perkins. "You suggest you see one that just pleased you. What was it like?"

"It was white," said her husband, "and white is perfectly plain, my dear; not a particle of lace or ruffling or what I think I have heard you call 'ticks,' nothing of the sort. All there was of it was a simple little band in flower patterns of some sort. It covered the entire waist."

"I sat beside the lady for half an hour in the car, and I can assure you it was quite neat and attractive. Simultaneous and I spoke of it on the way up from the train. He said he should mention it to his wife."

"You poor ignorant creature!" said Mrs. Perkins tenderly. "The days and days I must have taken to make that neat, simple, plain little waist!"

Yours Companion.

International Men.

The adventures that people who live exactly on the line between two countries have for escaping the customs and other regulations of both countries have often been recounted. Probably the most picturesque instance of this kind of escapade occurred in the town of Nogales, which lies exactly on the boundary between Mexico and Arizona.

On the United States side of the line in this town eggs were at one time made scarce by the decision of a tariff schedule permitting to that product, inasmuch as the hens in that region were chiefly owned on the Mexican side and were fed by the peasants on cheap Mexican grain.

One year a Maine Yankee arrived in Nogales with an eye to business. He concluded that his opportunity lay in the high price of eggs. Accordingly he put up a long henhouse exactly across the boundary line. At the Mexican end he regularly fed his hens with low priced Mexican grain.

The fowls ate their grain in Mexico and then walked across the line into the United States to lay their eggs. The transaction was, of course, perfectly legitimate, for the proprietor of the henhouse smuggled neither grain nor eggs. But he availed himself of high prices on one side and low prices on the other.—New York Tribune.

"Audible Writing."

The listing of a special teacher of penmanship for the public school of Barrington was considered by some of the more conservative patrons an unnecessary and altogether extravagant innovation. But when in the interests of expert wrist and finger motion considerable time and stationery were consumed in the practice of certain spiral flourishes to which the delighted children gave the name of "smoke" forbearance on the part of one of the mothers ceased to be a virtue, and she entered her protest in the following note to the writing master:

"Dear Sir, your taxis is very costly to support you when you tend to business let alone spending your time on Fries and Apples so I just say you teach my good Annie to write as if we want any smoke we can get it to him at home. Yours respectfully, Mrs. Jane Brown.—Woman's Home Companion.

"What would you do," the bridge-groom whispered hoarsely, "if by some terrible accident I should be drowned?"

"In the mild moonlight he saw his young wife pale and shudder. 'Oh, don't, Tom,' she cried. 'How can I? You don't know I don't look well in black.'—Chicago Inter Ocean.

My Lady And Perkins.

By C. B. LEWIS.

Copyrighted, 1907, by Associated Literary Press.

My lady has reached the age of sixty. She has become overweighted and a bit deaf. She was rheumatic, and she had a slight stoop and somewhat of an ungainly gait. But for the vigilance of her maid, Perkins, she would have looked every month of her age and passed for the old woman she was.

It was Perkins who skillfully padded her gowns and applied the dainty pink and white complexion and who gave her daily lessons in the art of remaining a young woman.

It was Perkins who had told her for the last dozen years that she looked over forty and who made each birthday count one less instead of one more. In her way, and it was a good way, Perkins was a jewel of the first water. My lady had wealth. When at the age of forty she had married again, only to become a widow for the second time within three years, her cash income had been largely added to.

At fifty, faded and ailing, she appeared, but my lady decided to preserve her widowhood and retain control of her money. At sixty she had herself and she had Perkins. Five years previously, when the woman had come to her, she had said:

"Perkins, I am a frivolous thing of thirty-five."

"Yes, ma'am," replied Perkins as she mentally added twenty years to the figure, "you are frivolous, but not quite a fool."

"And I want you to help me from becoming one."

"Certainly, ma'am."

"If you see me flirting or acting giddy, as most young women are apt to do at times, put your foot down and stop it."

"I will, ma'am."

"Should I really fall in love, Perkins—should I be so giddy and frivolous and foolish as to think of marriage, put both feet down and bring me to my senses ere it is too late. That's all this evening, Perkins."

This Perkins became lady's maid, chaperon and adviser combined. She was the keeper of the keys and the watchdog of the treasury. She was a good judge of human character and a good estimator of how far a flirtation could go and still come under the head of lures.

On several occasions, when things had gone their limit, she had announced the fact, and my lady had turned her back on the affair.

It was one season at Nice when things went wrong. Perkins was finding it hard work to keep the wrinkles rubbed away. My lady was beginning to notice her own stoop and hump and she was almost ready to acknowledge that she felt all of forty-eight and a few minutes over.

Count DuRoi had made his appearance at this opportune moment. He was a real French count, if that was worth anything. He was also a spendthrift and a gambler. He had about reached the end of his tether when he got around to Nice on a tour of adventure and ran across my lady and her friends.

His reputation soon caught up with him, but in Europe a title excuses much. There was almost at once an open flirtation between my lady and the count, and for a time the Argus-eyed Perkins watched it and said nothing.

However, when Mrs. Grady had begun to nod and wink and whisper behind her fan, she took my lady in hand. On all previous occasions the dear old thing had heaved a sigh or two, shrugged her shoulders and submitted to the inevitable, but on this occasion, to Perkins' great surprise, she proved obstinate.

"Perkins, I am surely in love," she replied.

"But you can't be. You are too—too young."

"But I know that I am in love, and I shall marry the count, poor boy."

Perkins came back at her with enough statistics to swamp the charmers of three or four adventures, but my lady had made up her mind and nothing could move her. Perkins knew when to argue and when to content herself behind the portieres.

Before the count left the parlor next day she was in possession of all needed particulars. There was to be a yacht-trip the party of a dozen friends, and during the trip the engagement would be announced—two weeks later a marriage and a honeymoon trip.

The yacht would not make the harbor until a late hour in the evening, and the count would call for my lady in a carriage. He further threw out a suggestion. It was that Perkins be locked in her room at a certain hour to prevent her wandering about Nice during the evening hours and getting lost or falling off the quay.

Human jewels such as she had been known to disappear off the face of the earth with unaccountable taking the night air of that charming resort.

"But Perkins won't be advertised for as a lost jewel," said Perkins to her mistress as the count left the house, and for the next few hours her face wore an expression that ought to have put my lady on her guard, but didn't.

She was so mild and gentle and affectionate and she seemed so far from suspecting any sort of plot that she could be asked for a raise of salary and got it on the spot. As she didn't ask, it was not offered.

Neither did my lady think it best to let her that she would soon be let of a place. That was another thing the count had suggested—the very last thing as he was leaving the house—that as soon as the marriage took place Perkins could go home. My lady simply patted her faithful servant and companion on the back and said that she should miss her when she died.

The day on which my lady was to begin her sailing trip dawned auspiciously. She had looked into her heart. She had felt the stir and flutter of love and romance. She had heard that one lady had said that she was old enough to be the count's grandmother.

She looked into her glass and indignantly repudiated the slander. Not a gray hair in her head; not a wrinkle on her face; not a wobble to her knees as she stood there and felt how good it was to be young again. Even her worst enemy must have been forced to admit that day the complexion just flashed by Perkins was a three-A brand and that the movements of the old dame around the room had all the litheness of girlhood.

After the midday lunch she became impatient and nervous and finally drove Perkins away to sit by herself. She secured an interval in which to pack a small trunk with the things she would need aboard the yacht. At the dinner hour she had the meal served in her rooms. She ate sparingly, but drank rather more than usual of her favorite brand of wine. It is needless to add that the bottle passed through the hands of Perkins before taking its place on the table.

Half an hour after dinner my lady felt drowsy and retired for a nap. She could sleep for two or three hours in the luxury of this time to turn the key on the unsuspecting Perkins.

Her puffs were laid aside for the nonce, her complexion seemed again radiant, and she laid her head on the pillow and fell asleep like a tired child—or a grandmother. However, when the count drove up soon after to pick her found my lady ready and waiting, and the drive to the quay was quickly made.

En route he wanted to inquire if there had been much trouble in disposing of the watchdog, but as his companion seemed disinclined for conversation he decided to let the point stand over until later. They went on board the yacht at once, and my lady was handed over to the care of the stewardess. She might have inquired if the rest of the party had come aboard yet, but she didn't. She didn't seem to care.

The count and the captain had their morning cocktails and were hungrily awaiting the appearance of my lady and breakfast, when she sailed into the cabin after a night of sleep broken at intervals by chuckles that seemed to chuckle of their own accord.

She had a smile of serenity on her face, and she sat down to the table with a good appetite. The captain doffed his cap and made his bow. The count started to do the same thing, but caught his breath and then yelled.

It was Perkins—Perkins the Jeweler—Perkins the watchdog—Perkins the all-around best ever. She was calm. She was tranquil. She was very much at home.

She excused the absence of my lady on the grounds of a very pressing engagement and promised, as her substitute, to enjoy every hour of the trip so kindly planned and so auspiciously begun.

It was a breakfast with firecrackers and Roman candles let to fly. Every minute or two there came a snipping and crackling, and every minute or two something would go off. The count cursed and raved and tore his hair, but didn't get out of bed and ended a breakfast so much in many moons.

Of course the craft put back. When Perkins reached the hotel she found my lady in tears and her complexion pained for life. The count left Nice the same evening without having called; the captain of the yacht had no news for reporters, and to this day there are not half a dozen people who can elevate their eyebrows and look knowingly when a certain name is mentioned.

Perkins did not take advantage of the circumstance as another might. She simply used the incident as a lever when she wanted to cut short another flirtation. After she had stated her case with the force and clearness of an attorney at law she would hold up a forefinger and conclude with:

"Cut it short, my lady. I may not be there next time to doctor your wife and take your place, and then what would the world say?"

Why Hurry?

The scolding cyclist was on the road to Stratford-on-Avon. He was bent over the handle bars, and the beads which bespoken the strenuous toiler were trickling off his face.

"Hill, son-of-a-bitch," he yelled to a passing youth, "am I right for Shakespeare's house?"

"Yes, you're right, mister. That's the drowsy reply of the leisurely youth. "But you needn't hurry. Shakespeare's dead."—London Answers.

High Finance.

"I have a bookkeeper in my office who is evidently destined to be one of our future capitalists of finance, all right," a broker remarked the other day. "He is a good clerk, but of late he has been late several times, and I had to call him down."

"You have been late three times already this week," I said. "What is the trouble—overseeing yourself?"

"No, sir, and I am very sorry," he answered. "I will try not to let it happen again. It has been due to the fact that I have been waiting to the office instead of riding."

"Think the exercise does you good?" I asked him.

"No, sir; rather a matter of economy," he explained. "Even small sums count to me, you see, and I have at length saved enough to have my shoes resoled."—Harper's Weekly.

The little child of the tenements was enjoying her first ride to the country and was enthusiastic in her admiration of the ferryman.

"Just look at the chickens!" she exclaimed in a burst of exultation. "They are running around raw!"—Current Literature.

Toll-Traffic Increases

It is a strange fact that the telephone toll business increases during hard times. This demonstrates the value of the toll service in saving money as well as time in making a trip to Chicago. Chicago Telephone Company.

The Meanest Man Again.

The Herald has discovered the meanest man in Sabotia. The cats disturbed his slumbers, and to get rid of them he offered a reward of 50 cents for every cat scalp. A boy destroyed nine of his alien disturbers and brought the scalps to the man for the reward. He was paid but 50 cents, however, as the man claimed that each cat has nine lives and the nine scalps might all have been from the same cat.—Topsie Capital.

The "Foreign Tour" Fad.

Although last year was a record one for the Americans "touring Europe," it is estimated that the amount of money left over there by this year's contingent will not fall far below that carried and dropped there in 1907. Much of this money year after year comes from the same source, and it is a question whether the annual touring of Europe by repeaters is really done for the purpose of instructive and entertaining sightseeing or for the glory of going abroad. Mark Twain in his "Innocents Abroad" punctured the extravagant American version of "the old world" and it is really surprising that people should care to see the same scenes and rehearse the same legends year after year because a foreign flavor attaches to it all.

Curiosity to see the beauties of Europe for the first time is natural, but the normal mind cannot fail to draw comparisons frequently that are most favorable to America so far as the grandeur of nature are concerned.

Europe preserves many of its historic show places, but here there is becoming modernized very rapidly, and the staid picturesqueness of its classic days is disappearing. About all that is worth going so far to see are now mere relics, one view of which serves for a lifetime, and as for the natural wonders, the Rhine and the Alps, we have them here scattered over the whole country. Moreover, we alone have a Niagara, a Yellowstone park, a valley of the Yosemite. Here alone can be found magnificent forests and mysterious and diversified gorges and canyons which it would take a visitor many seasons to explore. We have no wonderful past, but the glorious past of Europe is now too remote to be compared in life by the sight of a few relics or the hackneyed routine of guiding, who awakes smiles instead of inspiring awe. So, as attractions for annual touring, America has wonders well high unrivaled and certainly inexhaustible. When fashion says so their day will come.

Webster's meaning of the word "aviator" is both the flying machine and the experimenter in aviation. As the human mind is now in the experimental stage, strictly, "aviator" is all right for the man who runs the machine or tries to.

Money stringency kept New Yorkers from haunting the mosquito marsh summer resorts near by the past season, so the accommodating mosquitoes floated into the heart of the city on every ocean breeze.

Anyway, Mark Twain's "Italian villa" in Connecticut is the real thing as compared to the "castle in Spain" most authors dream over and die dreaming.

If the "sea monster" would take some other shape than snake-like, tales of his appearance now and then would be more likely to find believers.
