State Bankers Confused Applying for Re-opening

There seems to be a mix-up over the state among the bankers who are making an effort to open their banks.

Many state banks have been applying to the federal reserve bank of St. Louis for permits when they should make their application to Edward J. Barrett, state auditor. The federal reserve board has nothing to do with state banks.

Time can be saved by making application direct to the state auditor, instead of the federal reserve officials.
