A TIP TO THE CONSUMING PUBLIC

While the prices of some commodities have gone up and others will continue to rise, the one outstanding benefit of the recovery program to the buying public will be the general elimination from the market of cheap grade merchandise.

Trade agreements, sanctioned by the government, are forerunners to a concerted drive by producers to outlaw large surpluses of raw materials and competitive priced finished products with their viciously concealed poor qualities. A great deal of this merchandise is so low in quality that it is expensive at any and all prices as compared with high quality merchandise at fair prices.

The tenor of advertising will keep pace with the change in the production of merchandise. We predict that within the next few months you will see quality stressed in most advertising. In place of listing arrays of competitive low prices, advertising will herald claims of better products. It will reveal to you just why certain brands of merchandise are superior. The grades and quantities of raw materials and the types of labor used in production will be told.

Barrington stores will keep pace with the program—in fact they are now and have been stocking standard merchandise with well known and honestly earned reputations.

Your local medium, The Barrington Review, tells you about this merchandise, week after week. In order to keep posted on the best that your own market place has to offer, you will do well to read the advertising messages in each issue of The Review.

Buy at home where the dealer's reputation is at stake—where the retailer must and will stand behind his merchandise.
