"Toe Games"

By LYDIA LION ROBERTS

In these civilized times many children never experience the peculiar happiness of Whittier's "Barefoot Boy" and are, indeed, quite unacquainted with their own chief instruments of locomotion. Some afternoon when the children must remain in the house let them take off their shoes and stockings and play toe games. They will be surprised and delighted at the possibilities contingent on the "five little pigs" so interesting to them in their babyhood days. The games will keep them interested for a long time, and the exercise and training will be physically beneficial.

Let them literally "toe the line" by stretching a string across the floor and making a "tunnel" of tipping the full length of the string without using heels or leaving the line. It is great fun if this is done three or four times and a little faster each time. A variation of this game might be to have a child tiptoe along the string while someone counts ten—first slowly and then very fast.

Have someone put a sheet of wrapping paper on floor and give every child a pencil. Then ask each to write a letter of the alphabet, holding the pencil between his toes instead of his fingers. This will be the cause of much merriment as results are shown. The games may be varied by having the children draw pictures, using two pencils, one with each foot. If the games are played in the kitchen or on an old blanket or on linoleum where a few minor accidents will do no harm, let the children use paints and try to paint pictures holding the brush as they try to paint pictures holding the brush as they held the pencil.

Another game that is fun for the children to try to pick up things, such as a washcloth, a paper or a marble using only these same members. Still another is to place a box, pencil, or folded paper on one foot and have the child try to carry it safely across the room. When this has been done successfully, let him try carrying something on each foot.

Of course it is inadvisable to tell children of several interesting games at one time or even several modifications of the same game. A single suggestion will usually set the imagination and ingenuity of a group to work, so that they will think out plenty of variations, at least for the one occasion. But it is nice for Mother to have others in reserve.

Gave John Sherman Office

John Sherman of Mansfield, congressman, secretary of the treasury and secretary of state, early evinced an interest in politics, but his friends didn't hold high hopes for his future. For example, in 1948 he was a delegate to the national Whig convention in Philadelphia. As the convention was being organized, the chairman of the Ohio delegation asked the leaders in other delegations to elect Sherman secretary of the convention. He was a young man who could never get an office unless the convention gave him one, the Ohio chairman said. So Sherman was chosen secretary.

Religious Peace

Religious peace does not make those who have it less open-eyed, less brave, or less strenuous. But it does this—it makes them less fretful. makes them calmer.

The Masterful Man

"A masterful man," said H H Ho, the sage of Chinatown, "is like a good horseman who controls by a word and disdains the use of whip and spur."

Royal Minors

The eldest son of the king always bears the title of Prince of Wales and ranks next to the king in male precedence, but younger sons of the sovereign, though born princes, have no precedence beyond their near relationship to the king, until a dukedom is conferred upon them, when they become peers of the realm, says London Daily Magazine. Only the children, the brothers and sisters, the sisters or daughters-in-law, and the uncles and aunts of the king are entitled to be addressed as "Royal Highnesses." In the past this title has passed on indefinitely to all direct descendants of a king's son. But by the ruling of King George V in 1917, the title is confined to the children and grandchildren of the sovereign. The result will be that certain members of the royal house may in the future be plain Mr. or Miss Windsor.

Baseball Game Is Cancelled By Rain; Kenosha Here Sunday

Rain was again the reason for the cancelling of the baseball game of the Barrington Baseball team with the Silver Lake, Wis. nine last Sunday.

The locals will entertain the Kenosha nine, next Sunday on the Hough street diamond.

On the Sunday following there is to be a return game between the local nine and a team of "old timers" who starred for Barrington several years ago. In the first game two weeks ago, the "old timers" won by a score of 12 to 8. The Barrington outfit seeks to avenge that loss in the game now scheduled.
