Point Winners On Hand

Drover scored consistently in the dashes last year and is expected to do even better this year. Bennett's specialties are the high jump and pole vault and he should bring home a few ribbons. Williams won his letter in the running broad jump and he should be able to "go places" in conference meets. Catlow averaged enough points to win a letter in the javelin in 1930. Trestik in the discus, and Grabenkort in the high jump. Stronger competition exists this year, however, and the letter men will have to improve to be sure of many points. Moore won his letter two years ago but was troubled all last year with a pulled tendon. There is an abundance of new material also which will be given a tryout next Friday.

Residents Want To Enter Local School District

Nearly 40 people crowded into the office of F. L. Waterman, Monday afternoon where the board of trustees of Cuba township met for the purpose of considering petitions filed by property owners who are desirous of adjusting the boundary lines of their school districts so as to rearrange their districts to give what they believe will be better education advantages to their children. Two petitions for school boundary changes were filed, and opposition petitions were filed against each of these. One petition includes names of property owners in one school district and parts of three others, located north of Barrington, who wish to arrange the boundary lines so as to be located in school district No. 4 and be able to send their children to the Barrington school. School district No. 4, which is very irregular in boundary, does not extend far beyond the north limits of the village. The territory under consideration includes an area approximately 1 1/2 miles from east to west and three miles from north to south. It takes in Honey Lake school district No. 88 and parts of Bennett school district No. 91, Flint Creek school district No. 89 and White school district No. 90.

Seven Track Meets Are Scheduled For Coach Clark's Men

With "Old Sol" really bearing down for the first time and with outdoor workouts the order of the day, the boys on the track squad are beginning to think about competition. Coach Clark has arranged a schedule which contains two big meets, two triangular meets and at least one dual meet in addition to the important track meets which will be held next Friday, April 17. The complete schedule is as follows: April 17—Interclass meet. April 21—Arlington Heights, Palatine and Barrington at Palatine. April 24—Libertyville at Libertyville. May 2—Arlington Heights, Crystal Lake and Barrington at Crystal Lake. May 9—District meet, place not announced. May 16—State meet at Urbana. May 23—Conference meet at Palatine. More interest is being shown in track this year than ever before. About 40 boys are working out each evening. Coach Clark has a nucleus of seven letter men from previous years.

Point Winners On Hand

Drover scored consistently in the dashes last year and is expected to do even better this year. Bennett's specialties are the high jump and pole vault and he should bring home a few ribbons. Williams won his letter in the running broad jump and he should be able to "go places" in conference meets. Catlow averaged enough points to win a letter in the javelin in 1930. Trestik in the discus, and Grabenkort in the high jump. Stronger competition exists this year, however, and the letter men will have to improve to be sure of many points. Moore won his letter two years ago but was troubled all last year with a pulled tendon. There is an abundance of new material also which will be given a tryout next Friday.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF FORD VALUE

Bright, enduring RUSTLESS STEEL is used for many exposed bright metal parts of the Ford

WHEN YOU BUY a Ford you buy enduring beauty. The body finish is made to last for the life of the car and practically all exposed bright metal parts except the bumpers are made of enduring Rustless Steel.

This Rustless Steel has great tensile strength. It is the same bright metal all the way through. A salt test equivalent to forty years' service under the severest weather conditions failed to have any effect on its brilliance. It never requires polishing. All you do is wipe it with a damp cloth, as you do your windshield.

This is just one of many features that show the substantial worth of the Ford. In speed, comfort, safety, economy and long life—in the richness of its finish and upholstery—it brings you everything you want or need in a motor car at an unusually low price.

Merchants Beware of Fake Advertising Solicitors

Several local merchants have complained that transient salesmen of advertising service have claimed to be representatives of the Barrington Review with authority to set advertising rates and plan advertising copy for The Review. These schemers are equipped with an advertising service, usually an inferior one, which they attempt to sell to the merchants at exorbitant rates.

The Review takes this opportunity to advise local business men that it has no representatives other than its own staff members and that it is equipped with high grade advertising cut and copy service that is free to all advertisers with no charge additional to the regular space rates.

The management of The Review would be grateful to any local person reporting a transient salesman claiming to be authorized to sell advertising in The Review.

A recent decision of the supreme court upholding the constitutionality of the three cent gas tax has again been attacked by the Deep Rock Oil company attorneys, who have filed another petition for rehearing of their case involving Chicago's payment of gasoline taxes on city-owned vehicles. The court held in February that the law was constitutional and that it was not double taxation, and that exclusion of kerosene and electricity as motor fuel was not unreasonable discrimination.

An attack on the law permitting women to serve on juries was made in Federal court recently when attorneys for the nine men recently found guilty of conspiracy for violation of the prohibition law in Judge Fitz-Gerald's court, argued for a new trial. They maintained that women may not serve on juries legally without an amendment to the state constitution.

U. S. District Attorney Walter M. Provine upheld the law and argued that whatever right the defense had to attack the jury was lost when the defense proceeded with the trial and received the verdict.

Pick Lake Geneva Camp for Scouts

Month of Camp Life at Government Expense

Any young man between 17 and 24 who wants thirty days in the open at government expense will do well to send his name and address promptly to the Military Training Camps Association, 6 N. Michigan avenue, Chicago. There is room for nearly a thousand from Cook county in the Citizen's Military Training Camp, which opens at Fort Sheridan on July 30. All necessary expenses of transportation, uniforms, food, lodging and laundry are paid by the government. Young men of good mind, character and physical health are free to make application, but action must be taken promptly, since enough requests were received in March to fill half the space in the five camps at which training is given for the states of Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. Fort Sheridan can take care this year of 1,700 young men for infantry, cavalry and field artillery. All beginners are assigned to the infantry and the allotment for cavalry and field artillery is already practically filled by application of former students.

Sports in Afternoon

The program will be as in preceding years—military drill and instruction in the morning, out-door sports in the afternoon and in the evening much variety of entertainment, including moving pictures, dances, boxing bouts, concerts, lectures, etc.

Young men are quartered in an attractive tent city on the bluffs above Lake Michigan. Permanent mess halls and kitchens with expert army cooks offer an abundant and appetizing ration on a government allowance of 70c per day for each man enrolled.

No subsequent military obligation attaches to camp attendance. The war department offers, however, no idle vacation, but rather four weeks of real work and play—military training and athletic sports—for young men who want to make themselves of more value to their families, their communities and the country. Every young man who wishes to attend the Ft. Sheridan C. M. T. C. should write now for application blanks to the Military Training Camps Association, 6 N. Michigan avenue, Chicago, Ill.

SPECIMEN PUBLIC POLICY BALLOT

Village of Barrington, Cook and Lake Counties, Illinois, Annual Election, Tuesday, April 21, 1931.

Polling Place: Standard Motor Company Garage, 202 Railroad Street, Barrington, Illinois. Polls open from 6:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m.

A. C. BURANDT,
Village Clerk.

Shall a tax not exceeding one Mill be levied each year on all taxable property in the Village of Barrington, for the purpose of providing a fund for maintenance or employment of a municipal band for musical purposes?

YES

NO

Why should I vote for ORVILLE H. MEINERS FOR VILLAGE TRUSTEE

On Tuesday, April 21st, 1931, it will be your duty as a voter and taxpayer to elect a Mayor and three Trustees. Truly this will be an important election, for there are vital issues unfinished, and others to contend with in the near future. These problems must be met fairly and squarely and should be handled by men of experience and ability. The work of incompetent and inexperienced men has cost our Village a great sum of money.

Everyone is familiar with the careless method in which our Village bonds were handled. Does that indicate safe and sound business practice? Why should the taxpayer be subjected to needless and unnecessary expense? Had these bonds been properly handled, a great saving could have been effected. Why not run the affairs of our Village on a more business-like basis? Modern business requires men of character, integrity, judgment, trust, foresight, capacity, intelligence, efficiency, conservatism, honesty and experience.

Finance naturally plays an important part in both Village and business affairs and therefore the service of a man who is efficient and who recognizes the value of a dollar, is appreciated. Experience has been a great teacher, and at this time our Village needs a Trustee who is well acquainted with present-day finance, one who is able to represent and safeguard the interests of the people and taxpayers, and one in whom you can place your trust.

That is the reason why I have become a candidate for this office. I have entered on the taxpayers independent ticket and I am under no obligation to any person, party or organization. Barrington, where I own real estate has been my only home. If you agree with me that my fourteen (14) years of banking experience warrants my candidacy as a Trustee, I shall appreciate your vote.

NOV ARE CAN GIVE FOR

Lisette and Henri Lose Fortune

By JANNIS PARKER

LISETTE looked at the clock again, current and hugged Henri's arm more tightly. A stiff gust of wind whirled around her, and through her thin clothing. Her coat didn't feel as heavy as she thought it would when she first saw it in the store window. With her free hand she drew it more closely around her. Some day Henri would buy her a coat, such a coat! The eyes of the other midnights would drop out.

"Lisa, dear!" Henri would sometimes say, calling her attention to the costumes of the smart women that passed them. "That hat! You would look charming in it!" And Lisette would memorize every line ribbon, or tulle gill and late that night the lamp's rays would fall on her tawny hair as she bent over a piece of buckram, twisting and stitching it; or as she ran her finger caressingly along the upturned brim of a hat she had just fashioned from an old piece of velvet.

"Lisa, oh that gray dress! You was created for you, my dear. No. On the hill, girl, Lisa! The one with the tulle!" And when Lisette had saved enough she would go to the big department store and with her heart pounding in her veins, dignified tones she would ask the sales girl if they had anything as soft, gray crepe.

She felt hungry, but Henri didn't seem to need food. His studies he knew. How often he had tried to explain to her about the Sorbonne, but to her it was a dreadful university that it was a dreadful thing. To him it meant something bigger, finer, a home for their boy. Looking up at him now, as he clasped her arm more firmly, his straight brown hair with its slight wave made her forget the low, swirling clouds overhead. And that they were watching every centime for Henri's courses and their marriage.

Henri slackened his steps at the corner. "Lisette, dear, this is where I leave you. I am already twenty minutes late."

Lisette looked carefully up and down the almost deserted street. No one was in sight and an old laborer digging in the gutter. Then she stood very near on the tips of her toes and held her face up to Henri's.

"You will be there tonight, Henri?"

"I will be there, Lisa. I must hurry!"

Lisette's eyes darted away to a dreary-looking corner coach drawn by two tired horses.

"Henri, look! A hearse, and a companion! Come, we will have to follow it. That anyone should follow the poor soul to go to his resting place alone! Never. France, have a heart of such a thing! Come, Henri!" She grasped his hand, but he stood riveted to the pavement.

"Come, Henri, don't stand there! Would you have it go to the cemetery alone? Look, it is almost dark, so perhaps no one will. The street is almost deserted!"

Hearing of Meldrum Was Too Late

By CHARLES S. REID

HORACE MELDRUM bustled himself with tracing out visually a network of cobwebs against the high ceiling of the courtroom, while he drummed on his table with a lead pencil. There was much for him to think about, and apparently the network of cobwebs with its intricate meshes and tracings, offered a sort of background against which to project the irritating figures of his fancy. Being a young lawyer in the midst of an investigation of old and highly complicated attorneys, who were wise to all of the tricks of the profession, had its difficulties. Only three years old in the practice of law, he nevertheless had encountered a number of serious situations; but nothing had been quite so serious as the final aspects of his most important case, that of Mrs. Sadie Lawrence, charged with the murder of her husband and convicted of the crime. Meldrum had spent many days and many hours of his nights at work upon the structure of self-defense which he felt sure would convince the jury of the innocence of his client of murderous intent. He had not been averse, however, to using the factor of his client's rare beauty in the carefully wrought structure which he had builded.

The prosecuting attorney had shown with considerable success that the accused had had a lover with whom she had been more than intimately; and that her husband, the murdered man, had carried a considerable amount of life insurance in her favor. It had been a sort of repetition of the old story, according to the prosecuting attorney, of a fond and necessary lover, and a husband very much in the way, with a very tempting price on his head. On the other hand Meldrum had shown that the husband in reality was a brute of unqualified viciousness, who was in the habit of abusing his wife on every occasion, and who in all justice had merited the punishment he had received. The jury had brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree and without a recommendation for mercy, Meldrum's client had stood in speechless horror. The words of the sentence still rang in his ears:

"Death by electrocution."

Meldrum's thoughts could not dwell upon the scene without that frightful sentence racking through his brain. He promptly had moved for a new trial, and had come upon the strong wall of technicalities with which the bar of justice is hedged about. He had set out upon a frenzied search for new evidence, and with each step in acquiring the necessary facts, renewing his hard fight for a hearing. The rebuffs and delays which had beat him back like rampaging tidal waves had settled into a veritable nightmare of tempestuous activities. Weeks had passed, and still he had not been heard, when on this morning he sat in the courtroom waiting as usual while surveying the cobwebbed ceiling with his eyes, for his turn on the docket which had a strange habit of becoming upset and readjusted according to circumstances of whose manipulation he never had yet earned the secret. His efforts with the governor had an extension of time or stay of execution had been as fruitless as had been his urgent appeals to the court for a hearing. The court had been unconscionably curt and severe. A number of times he had been inconspicuously grieved by the majestically gowned judge. When he had offered explanations of the urgency of his case, he had been cut off with a word, and assured that he would be heard in his own good time, that the order of the docket must be observed.

So, this morning Meldrum sat waiting. There was a pallor on his face. He had devoted his time almost exclusively to the Lawrence case, no other considerable interest finding a place in the daily routine of his pursuits; and the strain had told heavily upon his nervous system.

Meanwhile his client, the pretty Mrs. Sadie Lawrence, quite a way in the third year of age, languished in her cell awaiting the day of her execution, amid all the horrors which might come of such a contemplation, with the uncertainty of reprieve before her. For the past two days Meldrum had not visited her. He could not have borne the sight of those appealing eyes. Barely thirty days of life had been given her in the shadow of the court; and these days had been vanishing with harrowing rapidity. Meldrum shuddered as his thoughts ran backward through the events of those few days.

At last the call of "Meldrum" arose clearly above the other sounds of the room.

Meldrum's pencil came to rest and his gaze came away from the cobweb against the ceiling. It was unbelievable that he was to be heard at last.

But the facts were clear. He had been called forward. Fearless and answered to his name.

"The Case of Lawrence, Convicted of Murder," sounded the court. "The court is ready for the hearing," further dinned the august voice.

Meldrum's hands dropped to the back of a convenient chair and a strange smile passed his clammy lips. "I am hereby began in sepulchral court that my client Mrs. Sadie Lawrence was executed an hour ago."

10 RACE HORSES PERISH IN FIRE EAST OF PALATINE

A $10,000 fire gutted two barns and burned to death seven thoroughbred race horses and three colts at the famous racing establishment of Mrs. Anna Dean east of Palatine early Wednesday morning. These horses were among the famous racers that were left Mrs. Dean by Charles Dean, her late husband and nationally known horseman.

It was believed the fire was started by sparks flying from a nearby grass fire. Many fields between Barrington and Des Plaines were being burned over Tuesday, and although under the control of attendants, several fires were left smoldering through the night.

The fire was discovered shortly after midnight Tuesday by a motorist from Arlington Heights. The Dean household was awakened, and the Palatine fire department called. The department battled the flames until noon Wednesday when the buildings had been reduced to smoldering ashes.

Immediate action on the part of the family and attendants resulted in the rescue of 13 horses from one building structure, although the ten in the other building could not be gotten out. Most of the horses killed belonged to a string which has been purchased from Stanley Kunz, former congressman.
