BOARD PROCEEDINGS.

No Agreement Reached With the Property Owners of Station Street—The Dynamite Dealers Limited to Five Pounds of Stock.

At the adjourned meeting of the Village Board Saturday evening little good was accomplished.

The property owners along the proposed Station street were there in full force, but the Board did not care to take the initiative and make them a proposition, while on the other hand the property owners were not all of the same opinion.

President Boehmer, speaking as a property owner, said he, and several others he had spoken to, would be satisfied to settle if the Board would deduct 25 per cent. of the benefit assessment. After a good deal of wrangle it was finally agreed to have the property owners meet at the village hall Wednesday evening (June 10th) and find out what kind of proposition they would make or would accept from the Board at the adjourned meeting this evening.

It was finally moved by Willmarth and seconded by Collen that the property owners be given a week's time to find out what proposition they cared to make or would accept. Carried.

An ordinance limiting the amount of stock of dynamite and explosive substances to be carried by dealers within the corporate limits of the village was then read and passed without any opposition.

Village Attorney Redmond was instructed to draw up a bond for the village treasurer.

The matter of remitting Hennings' fine was also brought up, but the Board did not think it wise to remit the fine until Hennings took out his saloon license, which he did Monday, and probably the matter will be settled at the adjourned meeting this evening.

The grade question also received attention. Collen was in favor of lowering the grade of Main street from Railroad to Williams street, providing it could lawfully be done. Peters said he wanted to know what could and should be done. Willmarth was in favor of throwing out the entire grade line, and several other members were of the same opinion. A good deal of discussion was indulged in, but no action was taken.

President Boehmer then requested the visitors of which there were many in the room, to leave the room so that the members of the Board could talk over some private business. All the visitors heeded the request.

President Boehmer undoubtedly made this unusual request with the best of intentions, but we cannot find any law that will back him up in such requests. The entire proceedings of the Board should be public property. The law plainly says: "It (meaning the city council or village board) shall sit with open doors."

On motion the Board adjourned till this evening.

ORDINANCE NO. 58.

Be it Ordained by the President and Board of Trustees of the Village of Barrington:

Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to keep at his, their or its place of business, or elsewhere within the Village of Barrington, a greater quantity of gunpowder than fifty pounds at any one time, and the same shall then be in tin canisters or cases containing not to exceed twenty-five pounds each, and in a situation remote from fires, lighted lamps, candles, gas or other inflammable matter, from which the same may be easily removed in case of fire. And it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or weigh any gunpowder after the lighting of lamps in the evening unless in sealed canisters or cases.

Whoever shall violate any of the provisions in this section shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars for each and every offense.

Section 2. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to store or keep for sale or private use at his, their or its place of business or private home, or elsewhere, within the corporate limits of the Village of Barrington, any dynamite.

PROVIDED, That any person, firm or corporation having within the Village of Barrington a warehouse or house detached and clear of other buildings and at least fifty feet distant, and on procuring the approval in writing of the village marshal, may apply to the village council for a permit to use said warehouse or house for said purpose. And upon said application the village council may draft a permit for the storage of dynamite, not to exceed five pounds.

Whoever shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be subject to a fine of not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense.

Section 3. This ordinance shall be in force from and after its passage. Passed June 6th A. D. 1896.

Approved June 6th, A. D. 1896. Published June 13th, A. D. 1896.

HENRY BOEHMER,
President of the Village of Barrington.
Attest: LYMAN A. POWERS,
Village Clerk.

TOOK AN OUTING.

A Pleasant Day Is Spent by Mrs. Sherman's Pupils at Oak Park, Elgin.

About thirty young boys and girls, pupils of the grammar room of the Barrington schools, chaperoned by their teacher, Mrs. Sherman, climbed into vehicles, engineered by Reuben Plagge and Mr. Harvey Harnden, and started for Elgin Saturday morning, on a sight-seeing tour. They arrived at Dundee about 10 o'clock, where they left their vehicles and proceeded to Oak Park, Elgin, on the trolley. Dinner and supper was served in the park from the well filled baskets which they had taken along with them.

Games, exploration parties and a trip to the zoological department of the park made the afternoon an especially pleasant one for the young folks, and they reluctantly left the park at 6 o'clock for the return trip. It was a day that few of the participants will forget in a long time.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING.

The Meetings of the Young People's Missionary Society of the Salem Church Becoming More Interesting Each Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Young People's Missionary Society of the Salem church Tuesday evening was well attended, and an extra fine program made the evening an especially pleasant one for those in attendance.

The opening song was sung with a vim by the members of the society, and the Scripture reading and Lord's prayer, which was given in concert, was heartily and devoutly participated in by them.

The recitation by Mrs. Zornow was fine, and was heartily applauded, as was also Miss Amanda Schroeder's selection on the organ.

M. J. Rauh read a paper entitled "Our Society."

Sam Lageschulte was put down on the program for a recitation, but when he took the floor he said he would deliver a sermon instead, and the enthusiasm he awakened was ample evidence that he knew what kind of sermons the young people like.

The solo by Mrs. Rev. Suhr well merited the hearty applause she received. Mrs. Suhr has an exceptionally sweet voice.

Mr. and Mrs. John Kampert then favored the audience with some fine instrumental music, which was good and pleased the audience very much.

Miss Sophia Schrogge gave a reading in which a strong plea was made in behalf of the German language, for which she was liberally applauded, going to show that the mother tongue has a strong hold on the hearts of our young people.

Miss Esther Lageschulte then delighted the audience with a selection on the organ, which was well executed.

The collection of dues was then taken, after which President Mary Frye announced that Mr. Frank Plagge had something to say.

Mr. Plagge said that he had received several letters from a small hamlet in Minnesota, asking for assistance in building a church. Mr. Plagge presented the matter in such a favorable light, that every member subscribed a liberal amount.

Misses Anna Grabenkort and Laura Wessel were then accepted as members of the society.

After a closing song the audience reluctantly departed for home.

An Auspicious Occasion—Mr. F. C. Tegtmeier Fondly Remembered By His Children and Grand-children.

About 8 o'clock Saturday evening twenty-two of F. C. Tegtmeier's children and grandchildren gathered at his home and tendered him a surprise party, the occasion being the gentleman's 74th birthday anniversary. After the congratulations had been offered they presented Mr. Tegtmeier with an elegant and comfortable lounge. At 10:30 o'clock refreshments were served, consisting of lemonade, strawberries and cream, cake and other edibles. The evening was very pleasantly spent by those in attendance: Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Tegtmeier and daughters, Misses Annie, Estella and Mabel, of Desplaines; Mr. and Mrs. H. Homuth, Mr. and Mrs. E. Hachmeister, Mr. and Mrs. H. Kampert, Misses Rosie and Ella Homuth, Masters Eddie Tegtmeier, Reuben, Edwin and Harry Homuth, Elmer, Paul, Arthur and Henry Kampert.

THE REVIEW wishes the gentleman many returns of the happy occasions.

GONE TO REST.

Mr. Andrew J. Gainer died at his home at Quentins Corners Wednesday evening, June 3d, 1896, aged 67 years 2 months and 5 days. The funeral took place Friday at 1:30 o'clock, Rev. Smith of Palatine officiating. The remains were interred in Staples Corners cemetery, and were followed to their last resting place by a large procession of people, an evidence of the high esteem in which Mr. Gainer was held by his neighbors and acquaintances.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord, when love has bound the heart.
'Tis hard, so hard, to speak the words, we must forever part.
Yet, again we hope to meet thee, when the day of life has fled;
In heaven we hope to greet thee, where no farewell tears are shed.

CASUALTIES.

A terrific hailstorm at an early hour Sunday morning destroyed thousands of acres of fine growing corn in southern Kansas, the hailstones cutting stalks off like a mowing machine. The storm was so severe that the roadsides are strewn with dead birds. The storm was general all over southern Kansas, and extended over a part of Oklahoma.

Leavenworth, Kan., was visited by a rainstorm Sunday which amounted to a cloudburst. Six boys sought shelter under a culvert and four were drowned, being unable to escape the rush of water. There is a well-defined rumor that Rev. Palmer S. Hulbert of the First Congregational church of Oak Park may be asked to resign his pastorate. A report that the request had already been made by the board of trustees is denied by D. J. Kennedy, chairman of the board; but he does not consent to explain what action may be taken in case the pastor's case is taken under consideration.

The city council passed an ordinance recently requiring all foreign insurance companies doing business in Sycamore to pay a tax of 2 per cent on their gross receipts for the benefit of the city fire department. The insurance companies combined and have ordered their agents to advance rates of insurance in Sycamore 5 per cent., to take effect June 15. So the people will, as usual, have to pay the freight.

The March-Davis Cycle company, of Chicago, made an assignment on Monday in the county court. It scheduled assets to the amount of $60,000 and liabilities of $70,000. Earlier in the day the concern had confessed judgment in the sum of $15,000 in favor of James J. McCarthy. Another bicycle factory, owned by F. and A. M. Vogel and John Burke, was also closed by the sheriff on a judgment of $750 in favor of Edward Lilly.

Many weeks ago, William Bartholin, a night watchman at the stock yards Chicago, suddenly disappeared, and left no trace behind except letters saying that he intended to commit suicide. But Tuesday night the stock yards police received word that the missing man was in a south side hospital. There, he has at length, been found; but he says he remembers nothing of what occurred from the time he left the stock yards until he was picked up in a helpless condition on the north side.

Two men named Derling and Boreinger, who have been doing a thriving business for five years past in the vicinity of Oak Park trapping orioles, thrushes, and other song birds, were captured last week by the police. Before Justice Smith they explained that their method was to smear bird lime on the twigs about the nests, and then to catch the pretty songsters when they were unable to escape from the sticky mess. The men were fined $5 each and costs, and given a sound lecture for their cruelty.

At Union the home of H. M. McIntyre was destroyed by fire early the other morning, the family barely escaping with their lives. The fire was of incendiary origin. There is a lockout at the works of the Illinois Steel works at Chicago, and nearly 1,500 men are thrown out of employment thereby. The order closing the entire plant was issued by Supt. Walker. The color line is said to be the direct cause of the lockout, although officers of the company do not admit it. They charge it entirely to a question of labor.

The old rod mill of the Illinois Steel company made the greatest record last Wednesday that has ever been made in the world. Eighty-one heats were turned out. There are sixteen billets to a heat and each billet weighs 300 pounds. The biggest day ever made before was seventy-nine heats. The new rod mill will start up in about ten days.

The preliminary examination of John Hudson on a charge of poisoning a public well at Shelbyville, took on an additional sensational turn by the disappearance of the two principal witnesses for the state, Mrs. John Hudson, wife of the accused, who, it is supposed, he intended killing, and Robert Ballard. The latter is a young man of twenty, who a short time ago jumped into notoriety by eloping with and marrying Mrs. Freibarger, a widow, aged 45 and wealthy, whose hostler he was. Notwithstanding the flight of these witnesses the justice found the evidence sufficient to hold Hudson in $2,000 bail.

George Butterworth and Miss Hattie Miller were married at the home of the bride in Bloomington the other evening in the presence of a large company of guests, of whom 100 were from other cities. The groom is a leading young business man and the bride the daughter of Rev. James Miller, pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal church.

Miss Edith Prince of Quincy and Rev. Nathaniel Thomas of Leavenworth, Kan., were married the other night before a large audience. Rev. Dean Moore performed the ceremony, assisted by Bishop Frank Melspau of Kansas. The bride is the daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Edward E. Prince and one of Quincy's most beautiful daughters. The groom is the rector of St. Paul's church, Leavenworth. Guests were present from Leavenworth, Kansas City, Chicago and Springfield.

Jailer Whitman has recently received several letters from persons who are anxious to secure mementos of the executions which take place in the Cook county jail. The other morning a letter was received from a man in Rock Falls, Ill., which was unique. "I have a brother who is afflicted with epileptic fits," he wrote. "A friend of his, who at one time was similarly afflicted, told my brother that he was cured by wearing a piece of rope around his neck which had been used in the execution of a murderer. Please send me a piece of rope an eighth of an inch in size and twenty inches long which has been used to hang some one. You need not hang a man to accommodate me, but if you have a piece of rope to spare send it to me." Another man, who lives in Chicago, has made a demand for all the ropes used in executions.

William Staley, suspected of poisoning the McDewitt family at Claytonville, narrowly escaped being lynched the other evening. He was arrested at Tipton, Ind., and was escorted to Claytonville by the sheriff of Tipton county. At East Lynn, where the prisoner was about to leave the train, fifty determined men with a rope were waiting for the 7 o'clock train. The Indiana sheriff got notice of what might be expected and took his prisoner off the train at Ambia, one mile from the state line and then took him to the Fowler jail to await requisition. Miss Lizzie McDewitt, one of the persons poisoned, may die. Staley, when arrested, asked how the McDewitt family was getting along. When told that Miss Lizzie would probably die he said he hoped she would. That expression is the only evidence of confession yet obtained from him.

CONVENTION OF 1892.

WHY BLAINE ENTERED THE RACE AT ELEVENTH HOUR.

President Harrison Had Greatly Offended Mrs. Blaine and She Forced Her Husband to Resign at the Last Moment.

ROBABLY THE most sensational event that took place during the national republican convention of 1892 was the entry of Blaine into the race at the eleventh hour and his crushing defeat. The secret of Blaine's untimely action was only recently made public by T. C. Crawford in Leslie's Weekly. It is quite likely that if Mrs. Blaine had not become angry at the President because he could not make an appointment which she wished made, Mr. Blaine would have remained at his post in the department of state, and his name would not have been used to trail at the end of a defeat at Minneapolis. Mrs. Blaine wished her son-in-law, Col. Coppinger, to be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general. In this she was actuated by the motives which would inspire a mother to seek to advance the fortunes of a son. The President could not make the appointment without violating the precedents quite as strong as laws and trampling on the rights of thirty-five officers who stood between the colonel and his desired advancement. The difficulty of making this appointment was conceded by Mr. Blaine, and he attached no blame to the President when he refused. But Mrs. Blaine was not so considerate. The day following the President's final decision Mrs. Blaine called at the White House.

This interview between Mrs. Blaine and the President was the beginning of the Blaine campaign. The interview was remarkable in many ways. No President was ever so openly defied to his face. All courtesy due to the President's high office was omitted. First, Mrs. Blaine entered one of the lower reception-rooms of the White House and asked that the President should come down from his office to see her. This request, remarkable from the standpoint of etiquette, was acceded to by the President. When he descended and entered the room Mrs. Blaine at once opened the conversation by demanding imperiously that the President should recede from his decision in the Coppinger case.

The President betrayed no impatience or temper at this request, notwithstanding the manner in which the demand was made. He had repeatedly gone over the case with Mr. Blaine. It was not necessary to repeat his reasons to Mrs. Blaine. Her fiery mood was not one appreciative of the cold logic of the situation. The President's firmness and calmness did not have a quieting effect upon Mrs. Blaine. She now turned upon him and charged him directly with unkindness to her family, cruelty in his former lack of consideration for the ambition of her dead son, Walker, and with general ingratitude to Mr. Blaine, whose influence had placed him where he was.

The President did not wince under this fierce attack. At the close of the fiery address of Mrs. Blaine she announced to the President that she would defeat him for his renomination and that she would force Mr. Blaine to run. This dramatic announcement was followed by Mrs. Blaine herself closing the interview, again in defiance of White House etiquette, and then leaving the room.

From that moment Mr. Blaine was in the field, although he himself did not apparently understand that he was to be forced to run. He called upon the President soon after Mrs. Blaine had gone, and gave the President to understand that he did not sympathize with his wife in her vigorous expression of displeasure.

Later on the Blaines went to New York. While the secretary was there Chauncey M. Depew called upon him for the purpose of learning if he was a candidate. All that he could learn came from Mrs. Blaine. It was she who assured him that Mr. Blaine would run. Mr. Depew obtained nothing from Mr. Blaine upon the subject. The fact was that Mr. Blaine was in a position where he could not say a word to any one of his old associates without explaining the cruel embarrassments of his situation. He could not ask Mr. Depew, who had been one of his intimate friends through many years and who was thoroughly devoted to his political fortunes, to go ahead now and champion him as a candidate. He had withdrawn in good faith and had so informed Mr. Depew. The agitators who called at the Fifth Avenue Hotel never succeeded in getting Mr. Blaine to say that he would be a candidate. All that they did succeed in was to obtain from Mrs. Blaine assurances that she would see that no more letters should be written, and she also gave the leading opponents of Mr. Harrison to understand that if Mr. Blaine was nominated he would accept.

Mr. Blaine never affirmed to any one who has appeared upon the surface

what he would do or would not do. He was kept in a negative attitude, and if he had been nominated undoubtedly the same influences which kept him in that position would have made him accept the nomination.

Mr. Depew evidently understood the situation clearly, and saw that a nomination coming under such circumstances would only result in an overwhelming defeat for the party. His position was very clear. He had no intimate relations with the opponents of the Harrison administration. He was previously committed to Mr. Harrison after Mr. Blaine withdrew. Mr. Blaine did not ask him to change that attitude, and so Mr. Depew entrenched himself in the impregnable position of taking his old leader at his word, respecting his carefully-expressed wishes, written with due deliberation over his own signature.

The situation which followed was as unfortunate as anything that could have been devised by Mr. Blaine's most vigorous enemies. The campaign from the start was foredoomed to fail. Its sole reason was a personal quarrel, and its sole strength was in a union with certain opposing elements in the party.

Mr. Blaine's attitude, too, fettered every one. He knew that he was in a false position, and with his clear vision must have seen the outcome. The fact that throughout the campaign at Minneapolis he never expressed a word to the public, and so far as is known, sent no instructions to the people who were supposed to represent him, shows clearly what he must have thought of his own campaign.

The President never asked Mr. Blaine to write his original letter of withdrawal, and never asked him to make public any further expressions of opinion upon the subject. The February letter was written without the solicitation of any member of the administration family. After it was published Mr. Harrison decided to become a candidate, and this decision had the tacit approval of Mr. Blaine. None of the silly or malicious stories circulated in any of the anti-Blaine circles could be traced to any member of the administration. None of them sought any quarrel with Mr. Blaine. On the contrary, they strenuously sought to avoid a difference until they knew it was inevitable.

If Mr. Blaine had given the real reasons to the public or to the President he would probably have said in his letter: "I go out of your Cabinet and break with you, in preference to a break with my domestic cabinet."

This situation was well understood within the inner circles of the Republican party, and was the best explanation of why the prominent friends of Mr. Blaine did not stand with him at Minneapolis.

government to the other nations of the earth. They demand a man well versed in the powers, duties, and prerogatives of each and every department of this government. They demand a man who will sacredly preserve the financial honor of the United States; one who knows enough to know that the national debt must be paid through the prosperity of this people; one who knows enough to know that all the financial theories in the world cannot redeem a single dollar; one who knows enough to know that all the money must be made, not by law, but by labor; one who knows enough to know that the people of the United States have the industry to make the money, and the honor to pay it over just as fast as they make it.

The Republicans of the United States demand a man who knows that prosperity and resumption, when they come, must come together; that when they come, they will come hand in hand through the golden harvest fields; hand in hand by the whirling spindles and the turning wheels; hand in hand past the open furnace doors; hand in hand by the flaming forges; hand in hand by the chimneys filled with eager fire, greeted and grasped by the countless sons of toil.

This money has to be dug out of the earth. You can not make it by passing resolutions in a political convention.

The Republicans of the United States want a man who knows that this government should protect every citizen, at home and abroad; who knows that any government that will not defend its defenders, and protect its protectors, is a disgrace to the map of the world. They demand a man who believes in the eternal separation and divorce of church and school. They demand a man whose political reputation is spotless as a star; but they do not demand that their candidate shall have a certificate of moral character signed by a confederate congress. The man who has, in full, heaped and rounded measure, all these splendid qualifications is the present grand and gallant leader of the Republican party—James G. Blaine.

Gentlemen of the convention, in the name of the great Republic, the only Republic that ever existed upon this earth; in the name of all her defenders and all of her supporters; in the name of all her soldiers living; in the name of all her soldiers dead upon the field of battle, and in the name of those who perished in the skeleton clutch of famine at Andersonville and Libby, whose sufferings he so vividly remembers, Illinois—Illinois nominates for the next president of this country, that prince of parliamentarians—that leader of leaders—James G. Blaine.

THE FAMOUS WIGWAM CHICAGO.

SPEECH AT CINCINNATI.

Nominating James G. Blaine for the Presidency, June, 1876.

(By Robert G. Ingersoll.)

Massachusetts may be satisfied with the loyalty of Benjamin H. Bristow; so am I; but if any man nominated by this convention cannot carry the state of Massachusetts, I am not satisfied with the loyalty of that state. If the nominee of this convention can not carry the grand old Commonwealth of Massachusetts by seventy-five thousand majority, I would advise them to sell out Faneuil Hall as a Democratic headquarters. I would advise them to take from Bunker Hill that old monument of glory.

The Republicans of the United States demand as their leader in the great contest of 1876 a man of intelligence, a man of integrity, a man of well-known and approved political opinions. They demand a statesman; they demand a reformer after as well as before the election. They demand a politician in the highest, broadest and best sense—a man of superb moral courage. They demand a man acquainted with public affairs—with the wants of the people; with not only the requirements of the hour, but with the demands of the future. They demand a man broad enough to comprehend the relations of this Criminal Instinct in Animals.

The Italian criminologist, Prof. Lombroso, declares that the criminal instinct exists in animals as well as human beings and cites a number of instances in proof of his assertion. One is that of a horse which simulated paralysis in order to escape taking part in a military maneuver. Such feigning on the part of a man, Prof. Lombroso states, would invariably denote a strong criminal instinct. Laziness is another mark of the habitual criminal and this trait when it is found in certain ones of the industrious animals, like the beaver, results in the idlers being shut out from the colonies of those who work. Something almost similar has been noted among elephants, for when one of these animals grows vicious he is excluded from the herd and forced to live alone or else in company with others like himself, who have been cast out. Prof. Lombroso says that among horses especially, since their cranial conformation is well known, it is easy to distinguish by the shape of the head alone those which are naturally vicious.—New York World.

FROM WASHINGTON.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE LIVTH CONGRESS.

A Brief Report of the Doings in Upper and Lower Houses of the National Legislature — The Work of a Week Condensed

Wednesday, June 3.

The senate passed the river and harbor bill over President Cleveland's veto by the decisive vote of 56 to 5. This was the last step in making the bill effective and it is now a law. The vote was taken after three hours of spirited debate, during which the president was criticised and defended, the remarks at times being directly and bitterly personal. The opposition to the veto was expressed by Senators Vest, Sherman, Pettigrew, Hawley and Butler, while the veto was defended by Senators Vilas, Hill and Bate.

The house began clearing the decks for final adjournment by extending the length of the daily sessions. The house met at 11 o'clock, and sat until 6 p. m. In addition to this Mr. Dingley, the floor leader of the majority, gave notice that henceforth he should object to all leaves of absence, save such as were requested on account of sickness. The importance of keeping a quorum constantly in attendance, he explained, compelled him to take this step. A partial conference report on the general deficiency bill was agreed to, and the bill sent back to further conference.

Thursday, June 4.

The "filled cheese" bill is ready for the president's signature. The senate passed it by a vote of thirty-seven to thirteen, rejecting all proposed amendments, including those of the finance committee, by which the amount of taxes levied on manufacturers and dealers was reduced. The bill was passed precisely as it came from the house.

The deficiency bill was completed and good progress was made on the quorum bill rapidly disappearing, and this fact may hasten final action, especially as a good many members of both houses of congress are anxious to leave here for St. Louis as soon as practicable. All the members desire as prompt an adjournment as possible, and some are hoping to see it take place on Saturday, or on Monday at the furthest. It seems more likely, however, to be Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

Friday, June 5.

Senator Morgan, in the senate, sharply criticised the course of the president in the Competitor matter in the course of a speech on his resolution calling upon the president for information as to the capture of the Competitor by a Spanish warship and the condemnation to death of United States citizens and as to whether any demand has been made for the release of the United States citizens.

He argued that it was the duty of the president to keep congress advised on the state of the union, and in particular on foreign affairs. The senator said he did not want congress to leave Washington, thus committing to the president the sole authority to demand or withhold a demand for the release of American citizens, to recognize or withhold recognition of belligerency.

On motion of Senator Sherman the senate went into secret session on the subject.

The election of senators by popular vote was afterward taken up. Mr. Chandler opposed the election of senators by the people, declaring it to be a concession to populist tendencies.

Mr. Palmer thought the idea was a good one.

Mr. Hawley (rep., Conn.) opposed the change, after which, at the request of Mr. Mitchell, the second Monday of December next was fixed for considering the subject.

Mr. Grosvenor (rep.) of Ohio called up his resolution requesting the President and the several cabinet officers for a detailed statement of the removals from office since March 3, 1893, and the appointments since that date, together with the number of ex-soldiers who have been appointed, promoted, reduced or removed.

Mr. Rinaker, from the Sixteenth Illinois district, was sworn in, the committee on contested elections having decided that he was entitled to the seat over Mr. Downing (dem.).

Women's Senses Alive.

Most people have different perceptions of colors in the two eyes and have a greater power of perceiving some color, being correspondingly blind to the others. The only absolutely non-color blind person whom Mr. Lovibond has met is a woman. He attributes the greater sensitiveness of women to color partly to an innate faculty and partly to education. The superiority of women in this respect is interesting, as recent researches by French savants have proved that as regards the sense of smell women are much less sensitive than men.—Exchange.

AMUSEMENTS.

"Lost, Strayed or Stolen," a comedy, with music by J. Cheever Goodwin and Woolson Morse will be given its first production on any stage at McVicker's theater on Monday evening, June 15th. The play is now being rehearsed in New York City, under the stage direction of James C. Duff, of comic opera fame, and the author. The final rehearsals will, however, take place on McVicker's stage. The company will include some of the best known comedians today on the stage, among whom may be mentioned: Fred Wright, Jr., M. J. Kennedy, Cyril Scott, George Backus, Robert Cotton, Harry Allen, Gilbert Clayton, Charles Plunkett, Wm. Cullington, Misses Jennie Goldthwaite, Alice Holbrook, Florence Thornton, Rose Baudet, George Caine, Madge Greet, George McGee, musical conductor. The production will in every way be a magnificent one. The stage settings, four in number, come from the brush of Walter Burridge, who is acknowledged to be the best scenic painter in this country, and some novel stage effects are promised in a scenic way. The costumes are being made by Dazian, of New York. This will be the first production given under the auspices of The American Theatre Syndicate, of which Mr. Joseph Brooks is general manager.

Buffalo Bill's Wild West will hold forth at the Chicago Coliseum, the old World's Fair site, for another week. It would be useless to try to describe this really great exhibition in a mere newspaper notice. To do it justice a book of good proportions could be written, and what is better, made interesting. Organized eleven years ago, the Wild West has grown to astounding proportions, and every feature that has been added gives strength to the show. There is always something uninteresting about other shows; not so with Buffalo Bill's—every act on the program is there because of its worth, and not merely to fill in time. Of course there are parts which will especially interest the children, and parents should not fail to take their little ones along. Taken all together the exhibition is easily the greatest on earth. A circus would get lost in one corner of it.

Blanche Walsh has been engaged as leading woman for Nat Goodwin's Australian tour.

Robert Downing is said to contemplate a production of a play based on incidents in the life of Putnam.

Hermann Sudermann, a German dramatist, is coming to this country next year.

There will be six roof gardens in New York this summer. The Madison Square, Casino, American, Pleasure Palace, Koster & Bial's and Olympia will each make a bid for public favor. Koster & Bial's will probably open June 8, and the largest and finest of all, the Olympia, will be seen for the first time about a week later.

Wilton Lackaye, who has not as yet secured a manager for next season, is nevertheless making steady progress in laying out his first starring tour. He will open at Hooley's theater, Chicago, and the route is pretty nearly booked.

Hooley's, McVicker's, the Chicago opera house and the Roof garden are now providing entertainment for the downtown patrons. The succession of a few cool evenings has helped business. On Saturday evening, one of the coolest evenings in May, the Roof garden was jammed. By opening or closing the side windows the garden can be made either a winter or summer resort. It is a comfortable place in any weather.

"The Gay Parisians" attracted the usual full house to Hooley's.

Lillian Russell will next season be seen in a new comic opera called "An American Beauty." The scenes are laid in New York, Newport and Monte Carlo. Gustave Kerker is writing the music and the book will come from Hugh Morton, author of "In Gay New York" and the Americanized "Lady Slavey."

Latest Ally of the X Rays.

While the X rays are undoubtedly able accurately to locate a foreign body such as a needle imbedded in the flesh of the hand, yet they are powerless to remove it, but electricity is equal to the occasion and offers means in the electro magnet of accomplishing this. A curious instance of the removal of a needle by a magnet is reported from Cherryfield, Me., to the Philadelphia Record. A woman pierced her hand by a needle, the eye going in first and the point breaking off, leaving a piece about three-quarters of an inch long imbedded in the flesh near the thumb. A slight cut was made in the skin over the place where the fragment was located and a powerful electro magnet devised at the local electric light station applied. The attraction of the magnet for the steel needle drew it out at once, causing it to cut its way through the flesh, broken end first. The magnet used was temporarily devised for the emergency and consisted of an inch piece of soft iron about one foot long, wound with ordinary magnet wire and attached to a 110 volt circuit.

The cheese bill has passed the senate, and if the president approves it, every dealer will be compelled to exhibit a sign, printed in bold letters, with the inscription "Filled Cheese Sold Here". It was originally offered for the protection of dairymen and consumers of cheese. The dairymen of Wisconsin and Illinois were particularly interested in it, and during its consideration by the house sent representatives to Washington to appear before the committee having it in charge. The bill is, in a general way, like the law regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. It defines filled cheese as "all substances made of milk or skimmed milk with the admixture of butter, animal oils or fats, vegetable or other oils or compounds foreign to such milk." The makers of this cheese are taxed under this bill $400 a year, while wholesale dealers in filled cheese are taxed $250 and retail dealers $12. In addition to this, a general revenue tax of 1 cent a pound is imposed on all filled cheese made in the United States and 8 cents a pound, beside the usual import duty, on that brought from foreign countries. Filled cheese must be packed only in wooden boxes. Each box must contain the words "filled cheese" in bold, black letters, not less than two inches in length, so that no one will be deceived into buying it. It is strictly a police measure intended to stop the flagrant adulterations of cheese, which have become so frequent since the packing houses and cottonseed oil mills began to provide such convenient adulterants.

The Most Proper Man Living.
He has been found and he dwells in Kansas. So irrefragable, so absolutely bombproof is his true virtue that this Kansas man ought to be set up in the stars among the constellations along with the heroes and freaks of the ages.
For he resisted the fascinations and cunning advances of even a pretty widow, and he a man too. She lived next door to him with her daughter, an impertinent chit of 18. The man was a tailor. Evidently there is something in the tailor trade occultly conducive to true virtue or this gentleman would never have set his face so like iron against that pretty widow, even when she kissed her hand to him.
The tailor had a wife. As sometimes happens with next door neighbors, there was not entire harmony between the tailor family and the widow family. We are told, in brief, that the widow's girl and the tailor's wife hated one another like poison. We are not informed why, but it was probably because the chit of a girl had made disparaging remarks about the tailor's wife's spring bonnet. Ladies' quarrels are apt to arise in that way. At any rate, the girl wished to "devil" the tailor's wife. So she began to call the tailor pet names—"dearie," "duck-sie," "sweetie," and such as that. This she confessed with tears of penitence when she was arrested and brought to court by the tailor, who then and there earned his title of the most virtuous man living.
The tailor, good family man that he was, bore the endearments with meek and uncomplaining dignity till they came to the point where the girl blew him a kiss off the tips of her fingers. Outraged virtue could then endure no more. The tailor had the girl arrested for disturbing the peace and attempting to trifle with the high character of a respectable married man. The widow herself was arrested at the same time on the same charge. But she was let off on her calling not only heaven but the police justice to witness in the most solemn manner that it was no; the tailor, but the tailor's wife to whom she had kissed her hand. Evidently the judge thought there was a difference between blowing a kiss to a tailor and a tailor's wife, for he let the mother off with a reprimand, while he fined the girl $5, although she protested that she just wanted to make the man's wife jealous because she hated her. We are glad to know the law affords protection to masculine innocence and virtue.

Tobacco in Politics.
Tobacco bids fair to become as important in Cuban military strategy as quinine and cotton were privately known to be in our own war. Weyler's order forbidding the exportation of any tobacco from Cuba to any other part of the world than Spain seems to be an indirect way of revenging himself on us for interfering with his command to shoot the two Americans caught on the Competitor.
The order will affect American cigar manufacturers seriously. We have in this country plenty of tobacco to fill a cigar, and a good one. But the long, fine leaf that wraps it and holds it fast together in the cigar comes from Cuba, and it will be impossible to replace it. If that were the worst, we might recommend smokers to turn to pipes for their solace, or wrap their cigar filling material in cigarette paper, or any paper, or smoke paper out and out or stop smoking altogether, which would doubtless be good for their nerves.
But unfortunately that is not the worst. The young tobacco crop of Cuba, what the revolutionists have left of it, belongs mostly already to American manufacturers. They have advanced money on it as it stood in the fields. They have immense warehouses in Cuba in which the crop is gathered, waiting to be shipped to the United States. To lose both their money and the tobacco, for which they have paid, will bankrupt many of them. Large numbers of tobacco factories will be shut down here, hundreds, probably thousands, of men will be thrown out of employment. This was Weyler's little revenge on Americans.
There will, however, be one thing left for the workmen out of employment. They can enlist in the Cuban patriot army, steal over there and help whip the Spaniards out of the island, so as to bring prosperity back. Some of them will particularly enjoy doing this no doubt.
Mr. Lecky, in his work "Democracy and Liberty," leads the reader to infer that in his judgment nothing is so disastrous to a country as to have a "mere numerical majority" vote all the taxes. He bewails bitterly that England is rapidly approaching that condition of affairs, the inevitable result of which will be the division of society into two classes, one of which votes the taxes and the other class pays them. But this is better than for one class, the rich, to have the power to vote all the taxes and to pay too. Precious little progress in the way of public improvements, public schools, free libraries and bathhouses would be made if the rich voted only the taxes they themselves paid. The poor would be even more completely disfranchised than Lecky declares the rich are under the rule of a "mere numerical majority."
Half a million dollars can be better spent by the government than in paying the expenses of a "commission" to investigate the relations of labor and capital. That is practically what United States Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright has been doing now for a number of years, and he is doing it better than any commission of politicians can possibly do. All the information needed is already accessible to our great American statesmen. It is time to stop this universal running into government commissions for every little matter that comes up. We shall be as bad as Great Britain with her circumlocution office soon.
Already the fakirs at the seaside and summer resorts have rigged up appliances which exhibit Professor Roentgen's celebrated rays, and loudly invite the throng to come in, pay a dime or nickel and see the bones of their hands. If there is anybody on this footstool who can get ahead of the American fakir, he has not yet been discovered.
John Bull will probably not be so particular whether Venezuela apologizes for the Uran incident or not so long as she pays him that $5,000 as a balm to his wounded feelings. The jingling of the guinea helps today the hurt British honor feels even more than it did in Tennyson's time, if that were possible.
The regular weekly bulletin has been received from Havana informing us that there has been another important engagement and the Cuban insurgents have been routed. We would suggest a little variety in the wording of the bulletin, as by this time it has become a trifle monotonous.
The Women's Relief Corps of Blue Ridge, Kan., has concluded that Decoration day is so entirely given up to horse races, base ball games, cock fights and other sporting events that it is a desecration to observe it any longer, and they therefore decorated the graves of the soldiers on May 29th.

HOW TO TREAT A WIFE.
(From the Pacific Health Journal.)
First get a wife; second be patient. You may have great trials and perplexities in your business, but do not therefor, carry to your home a cloudy or contracted brow. Your wife may have trials, which, though of less magnitude, may be hard for her to bear. A kind word, a tender look, will do wonders in chasing from her brow all clouds of gloom.—To this we would add always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house. It is the best and is sure to be needed sooner or later. Your wife will then know that you really care for her and wish to protect her health. For sale by A. L. Waller, druggist.

RUTHVEN'S WARD

BY FLORENCE MARRYAT.

CHAPTER X.

AMILTON Shore was a youth who to be remembered must be seen. He said witty and amusing things, and he could pay very pretty compliments, but he never expressed a sentiment that was worth recalling after he had passed out of sight. So that Margaret had to supply memory for herself, and magnify molehills into mountains, in order to maintain an ordinary decent stock of sweet things to muse upon and weep over.

Meanwhile, Ruthven kept very much out of her way—a course of conduct which the girl misinterpreted into anger, and fretted about accordingly. The real reason being that Ruthven did not dare trust himself in her presence. The love he had cherished when absent from her, and the dreams he had dreamed, had become twice as precious when he met her again, and he was too wary to cast himself headlong under the wheels of a juggernaut which he knew would crush him.

In her want of companionship, Margaret's thoughts turned to her old school friend, Carmen Flower. The young ladies had, naturally, kept up a correspondence since leaving Blackheath; but it had not been quite so confidential on Margaret's part as on that of Carmen. She had not told her, in fact, of her love affair. The old habit of secrecy, instilled so early into her by Mrs. Garrett, had something, perhaps, to do with this, and natural timidity still more. Carmen was such a quizz; she laughed at everybody and everything. Margaret felt sure she should never hear the last word of it were she rash enough to disclose her secret whilst it was in its infancy. But the girls wrote freely to each other on all other topics; and Margaret was wondering whether a gentle hint on the subject of her loneliness might not bring, a renewal of the invitation to Abbotsville, when she received a hastily written letter from Carmen to say that Sir Frederick Flower was going to take her on the continent for a few weeks.

"We shall be moving about from place to place," she wrote, "so I can not give you any particular address to write to; but we shall be home again in a couple of months at the latest, and then you must persuade Mr. Ruthven to let you come on a visit to us for a good long spell."

So that hope was ended for the present, and Margaret was obliged to content herself with dreaming of the "good long spell" in the future.

But she drooped visibly whilst dreaming. She had been used to the company of the young, and felt like a prisoner cooped up in that little noose during the dry, hot, dusty London season.

At last Mrs. Garrett mentioned the girl's condition to her master, who immediately became absurdly excited and alarmed, cursing his own folly and selfishness in not having foreseen such a calamity, and proposing to call in the first physician in London to consult about her health.

"Lor' bless you, Mr. James! don't be in such a quandary. All she wants is a little fresh air. She's been too much shut up with me at home. Can't you take her down to the sea-side now for a few weeks—to Margate or Brighton, or some nice cheerful place. It'll do you both good and brisk you up again, for you don't look in the best of spirits, to my mind, yourself."

"I—I—no—I can't go; I'm detained by business," stammered the unfortunate Ruthven; "but I'll get lodgings at once in Brighton, and you shall take her down there next week, Garrett, and I'll get a bed at the club till you return."

What would he not have given to be able to accompany Margaret to either of the places mentioned, and to have watched the roses return to her cheeks, and the lightning flash to her eye?

Mrs. Garrett went down duly to Brighton with her charge, where the fresh, salt breezes and life-inspiring air could not fail to make her better in body, at least, whatever they did in mind.

Hamilton's letters began to dwindle, both in number and substance. At first he used to write to her two and three times a week; but that she hardly expected to last forever; then a week would elapse between the reception of his letters; now more than a fortnight passed without her hearing from him; and the epistles, when they arrived, were so unsatisfactory as to cause her tears.

Hamilton was not living entirely at Rouen, as his tutor constantly made excursions into the surrounding country, taking his pupil with him; but these changes of scene, instead of making his letters more full of news, seemed to occupy his time to the exclusion of writing altogether.

Carmen's letters were a source of both comfort and amusement to Margaret at this period. She had also picked up an admirer on her travels, and was full of the beautiful presents of flowers he had made her, and the ceaseless adoration he displayed for her.

Unlike Margaret, Carmen's nature was too vain and self-conscious to permit her to keep such a circumstance to herself; but there was a mystery about her love-making, which was all carried on without the knowledge of Sir Frederic, that made Margaret feel it could neither be right nor modest, and Mrs. Garrett loudly denounced it as "altogether brazen and wicked."

Still, Carmen's accounts of her own escapades were very entertaining and often made Margaret laugh outright in the midst of her lamentation that no letter from Hamilton had arrived by the same post. It came, however, all too soon.

One day, Mrs. Garrett having made a little journey on behalf of her house-keeping, returned to their apartments to find Margaret dissolved in tears. "Oh, Garrett!" she exclaimed, "he doesn't love me any longer! My heart is broken—I feel it is. I shall die! I cannot live without his presence or his love."

"Bless my soul! Miss Margaret, what are you talking about?"

"I've had a letter from Hamilton, and he says—he says—that it was all a mistake—and we shall never be happy together—and that we'd better break it off, because it never was a proper engagement—and—and—here poor Margaret's sobs nearly choked her utterance—"he's seen somebody he likes better than he does me."

"Well, if Mr. Hamilton writes that to you," exclaimed Mrs. Garrett, determinedly, "all I say is, that he's a scoundrel and a blackguard, and I'd like to have the flaying of him alive. Seen some one he likes better, indeed! some stumpy French gal, I suppose, like Mrs. Flitter's maid—all eyes and cap and ear-rings—a stuck-up, impudent creature, as can't speak a Christian language. But it can't be true, Miss Margaret; it can't be true!"

"Read for yourself, Garrett," said the girl, pushing the letter toward her. It was all as true as Gospel.

Hamilton wrote to her in the same pretentious, high-handed way in which he spoke. His letter might have come from a man of fifty, in its narrow-minded, self-excusing acumen.

He reminded the girl that his uncle had disapproved of their engagement for several reasons, and as he was anxious to embrace every opportunity of furthering the wishes of the person to whom he owed every thing in the world (this last sentence was especially for Mr. Ruthven's benefit), he considered it most honorable and best to let her know his change of sentiment at once; but he trusted they should always continue friends, and that what had passed would make no difference to their intimacy. In short, he wrote like the young scoundrel Mrs. Garrett had called him; and the housekeeper was still deliberating in what words she should transmit the intelligence to her master, when Ruthven unexpectedly walked into their apartments.

He also had had a letter from his nephew on the subject, which though not more than he expected, had thoroughly disgusted him.

"Now, what am I to do for you, Margaret?" he said, when the ice had been broken between them. "Shall I compel the hound to keep his word? I can do it if you choose. He is completely dependent on me, and I have him in my power."

"Compel him to keep his word!" repeated the girl; "but, Mr. Ruthven, he has already broken it."

"I mean, shall I compel him to marry you?"

A deep crimson blush spread itself all over her neck and face, even up to the parting of her hair—and her eyes filled with tears of shame.

"Oh! how can you ask me such a question? Do you think I would marry him now—after he has sent me this letter?"

"You are quite determined not to have anything to say to him, then?"

"Quite! I would not marry him if he were to ask me from now till doomsday."

"I'm very glad to hear it," replied Ruthven, cheerfully. "I know what Hamilton is, and that you would find it out one day; but I wished you to discover it for yourself. He is utterly heartless—selfish and inconsiderate. He would have made you a very bad husband; and you are lucky to have got rid of him so easily."

But it was not yet time to console the girl for her disappointment. Her tears flowed freely whenever Hamilton's name was mentioned, and her guardian found it best not to allude to the subject at all. But he wrote his nephew a letter which the young man never forgot nor forgave, and which considerably opened his eyes as to the light in which, were he a few years older, society would view the act of which he had made so little.

Ruthven did not immediately return to town, but took up quarters at an hotel, and devoted himself to diverting the mind of the poor girl who had been so badly used. He conducted her to all the evening entertainments in Brighton and by day he drove her out into the surrounding country, so that her youth and natural buoyancy soon enabled her to shake off the first effects of her trouble.

The thought that seemed to be deepest in Margaret's breast, and press hardest upon her heart at this crisis, was that of her origin. She had taken it into her head that it was for this reason alone that Hamilton had broken off their engagement, and she shrunk visibly at any word or action of Ruthven's that was called forth by that to which she believed she had no right—her title to being a lady. One day, after much hesitation, she asked him if he would let her go into the world and earn her own living.

"My dear, where would you go? Not on the stage?" exclaimed Ruthven, who could only think of his own designs for her.

"Oh, no! I am not clever enough; but as a companion—quite young ladies sometimes have companions—and I think I should feel happier, perhaps, and more in my proper place if I could make some money to keep myself."

"I am sorry to hear you say that, Margaret. I know you are not very bright at present; but if change of scene will do you good, you shall have as much as you like. But why do you say you would be more in your proper place as a companion than here?"

"Because I have no right to be here—you forget what I am. You raised me from my natural position, and the first thing that came of it was harm."

"You mustn't speak like that, my dear. No one can forget what you are. In your natural position you might not have had the education I have been so pleased to give you; but all who see the advantage you have taken of it must agree that you have made yourself a gentlewoman, whatever Fate designed for you."

"You are so kind to me," murmured the girl, looking up at him gratefully, with her dreamy, limpid, blue eyes.

"Nonsense, child. The little I have been able to do you have repaid tenfold, and can repay still further if you choose."

"Tell me how, Mr. Ruthven."

"By never mentioning the idea of your earning your own living. I am not a rich man, but I have made sufficient provision for you in my will to prevent you from ever having the necessity to work. And nothing hurts me more than to hear you propose it."

Margaret answered her guardian's speech by raising her innocent lips to his.

Ruthven shrunk from the contact as though they scorched him; but, fortunately, the girl saw nothing amiss in his greeting. He had not been in the habit of kissing his beautiful protegee, having left all that to his nephew, and now he wished he had not been quite so reserved with her. But a demon had sprung up between Margaret and himself, and the time of kissing was over for him, unless it might be continued forever.

"Come," he said, confusedly, on that occasion, "here are letters for us both. Let us see what their contents may hold for us."

Margaret took hers with a sigh. She believed she could never feel any interest in the post again now Hamilton's letters had ceased. But when she saw it was from Carmen Flower, and bore the English postmark, she became eager to peruse it.

The epistle proved to be more interesting than it promised, and contained an invitation for both Margaret and her guardian to go and spend a couple of months at Abbotsville.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION. ST. LOUIS, MO. JUNE 1896.

IT WILL SEAT 14,000.

LARGEST CONVENTION HALL.

How the Proceedings of the Convention
Will Be Handled—Number of Delegates and National Committeemen—
Routine Work.

ST. LOUIS is a hot city in June, but so was Chicago in 1888 and Minneapolis in 1892, as Republican delegates will testify. Over-crowding and inconvenient accommodations are more to be dreaded during National convention week than hot weather. St. Louis, according to all reports, will furnish better facilities than ever before have been accorded to a National convention.

The immense new auditorium, where the Republican National Convention will be held, will accommodate 14,000. There will be 909 National delegates in the convention this year—more than ever before—and the same number of alternates. There will be 53 members of the National Committee present, and the rest of the vast audience will consist mainly of "rooters" for the several candidates whose names are to be presented for the highest honor in the gift of the American people.

According to recent estimate, there will be none too much room. It is customary to give to the city in which the convention is held, the largest block of seats. St. Louis will have more seats in the auditorium than any convention city ever obtained before.

It has put in a modest request for 3,500 seats, and will probably receive 2,500 at least. Ohio and Iowa, being near by and both having prominent candidates, will probably send the two largest State Delegations. Ohio, it is estimated by zealous Republicans of the Buckeye state, may have as many as 20,000 Republicans in St. Louis, but, of course, only a small per cent of them will get seats in the auditorium.

Timothy E. Byrnes of Minneapolis, who has been elected sergeant-at-arms of the convention by the National Committee, will have charge of the distribution of tickets for admission. Each National delegate and alternate will receive two tickets—and as many more as they can get. The member of the National Committee from each state will make out a list of all Republicans in his state who may want to attend the proceedings, and the tickets will be distributed among the different states, pro rata. Under the system of distribution which Sergeant-at-Arms Byrnes will employ it will be practically impossible for the friends of any one candidate to "pack" the convention hall, despite the fears of such an event which have been expressed. Mr. Byrnes has said that, so far as he has the power, the friends of all the candidates will be treated alike.

The real work of the convention, leading up to and providing for the selection of the National ticket, is done in committee rooms. Spacious accommodations for committee work have been provided in the auditorium, and the newspaper facilities will be especially convenient.

A novel scheme is to be put in operation in the convention hall. Each section of the hall where individual State delegations are seated, will be connected by telephone with the chairman's desk, that he may easily ascertain the name of every delegate who may claim recognition. The scheme, it is said, will go away with the usual annoyance and worry in recognizing delegates who think they have a duty to perform by claiming the attention of the convention.

The telegraph facilities for dispatching to every corner of the Nation the names of the nominees will be ample. Nine new copper wires are strung from St. Louis to Chicago and six from Chicago to New York. About fifty loops will be run into the Auditorium. Wearied delegates can repair for refreshment to any number of gardens and open-air restaurants and cafes, where the best that St. Louis can offer will be placed before them at prices that may make them complain. But what is the loss of a few hundred dollars to an enthusiastic Republican, fired with interest in his party's welfare, and perchance, in some instances, with irons of his own in the fire?

Thomas H. Carter, of Montana, chairman of the National Committee, will call the convention to order. But important work of the convention will have been done by the National Committee even before the delegates assemble in their seats.

On the day preceding the convention a temporary roll of delegates has to be formed, for manifestly no State can have the advantage of another in representation. Some states will send contesting delegations, but only one set can be seated. It would not be proper, on the other hand, to shut a state out entirely because of contests. Each must have representation in the organization of the convention. General Clarkson of the National Committee from Iowa says there will be about 110 contested seats out of the 909, and that the nomination may really hinge upon the results of these contests.

It should not be supposed that the National Committee reserves to itself the power to decide contests; that must finally be done by the convention itself. This much, however, the National Committee will do, and its action may have an important bearing on the result in the convention—the National Committee will meet, and a sub-committee on contests will be selected. Each member of the committee will report to this sub-committee the list of delegates from his state, and if there be no contests these names will be placed on the temporary roll by the secretary of the National Committee. In states where contesting delegations have been elected the claims of both sides will be heard, and the National Committeeman from the state will give his version of the contest. The sub-committee will decide and instruct the secretary which delegates are entitled to representation.

The importance of these decisions in committee cannot be overestimated, for while they are in no way binding upon the convention, the action of the committee, based generally on good and sufficient grounds, is seldom overturned.

The National Committee selects also by a majority vote the temporary and permanent chairman of the convention; that is to say, it selects a name for each position, to be presented to the convention. A bitter contest may arise within the National Committee over these selections. Sometimes, as in 1892, the minority may withdraw their candidate, and make the selection of temporary chairman unanimous, as they did for J. Sloat Fassett. Again, as in 1884, a majority and minority report may be presented and the fight brought to a head in the opening of the convention.

As the Democratic National Convention in 1892, after Mr. Cleveland's friends, who controlled the Committee on Resolutions, had prepared a tariff plank under Mr. Cleveland's supervision, the convention, which afterward turned to and nominated Cleveland, broke away at one word from Henry Watterson and rejected the tariff plank as presented by the Cleveland committee. No better example of the American principle in politics—that the sovereign will of the people must govern—is accorded than in a National convention.

CONKLING STOPPED TO TALK.

That Incident Prevented Windom's Nomination for the Presidency.

From the Minneapolis Journal: In the political history of the state "Windom Ten" has been written down as a burlesque incident. When the campaign for the republican nomination for president in 1880 was in progress Minnesota was an overwhelmingly enthusiastic Blaine state. Senator Conkling's daring ambition was to defeat Blaine, and he was shrewd enough to see that Minnesota could not be swerved from Blaine save by springing a "favorite son." Mr. Windom was flattered by Conkling's suggestion and the poison spread to his friends, with the result that Minnesota went to Chicago solidly instructed for Windom. At that time Minnesota only had ten delegates to the national convention, and during the four days' balloting the reading clerk would announce in stentorian tones, "Windom, ten," and much of the time the announcement would provoke derisive laughter. Blaine's friends always felt that if Minnesota had been loyal he would have been the nominee, and in their estimation "Windom, ten," was a badge of tricky politics. The delegation was undoubtedly sincere, but it seemed at the time like grasping for a will-o'-the-wisp.

I met an old politician yesterday, an intimate friend of Windom, who said he called on Windom in Washington some time after the event and Windom said to him, "Did you know I came pretty near receiving the nomination for president?" The visitor conceded that he did not understand how "Windom, ten," was very near the goal, and Mr. Windom then explained. He said Postmaster General James of New York told him that the Grant forces had decided to go to him and have the credit of nominating the president, even though it was not first choice. This was thought to be better than to allow the Blaine forces to win a semi-victory in a similar manner. Mr. James said that Conkling actually left his seat to go over and notify the Minnesota delegation that they were going for Windom and urge them to do the rest, when someone halted him and advised delaying one more ballot. He accepted the advice. This was fatal. On that one ballot the stampede to Garfield began and then it was too late. If the "Grant 306" had been added to "Windom, ten," it would have carried the stampede in the Windom instead of the Garfield direction.

Strange Cargoes at Liverpool.

Liverpool receives some very curious cargoes at times. Cargoes of turtles and other live and dead animals, casks of speeches, shiploads of bones from battlefields, of human mummies from the Egyptian tombs and of dead cats from the cat cemeteries in the same country.

The cargo of speeches had a Yankee source. An agency, desiring the American oratory should not be lost in Britain, organized a system by which every great address delivered in the continent after that idea was formed should be recorded by the phonograph. Songs were recorded in the same way and it was estimated that the consign-

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

The Wauconda Graduates Acquit Themselves With Honor.

THE KENT-BANGS WEDDING.

The Wauconda Baptist Church Filled to Overflowing with an Appreciative and Select Audience, who are Given a Rare Treat.

The commencement exercises at the Baptist church, Wauconda, of the Wauconda Public schools were attended by one of the largest and most select audience that Wauconda has ever seen. The ushers were kept very busy, and deserve praise for the manner in which they handled the crowd.

Miss Mattie E. Eggleston of Chicago opened the exercises with a piano solo, after which Rev. Clark invoked the Divine blessings on the meeting. A glee song entitled "Oh Love, While Love is Left to Thee," was sung in a very able manner.

Harry Graham's essay entitled "Immigration Must Be Stopped," was a piece of work that would grace the editorial columns of any American journal. He dealt with this great problem in a fair, conservative yet firm manner. Before reading his essay Harry gracefully thanked all who had befriended the graduates.

Mrs. C. K. Werden sang a solo which was heartily appreciated.

The illustrated essay, "Caricature," by Clyde Golding was a masterpiece, and would have done credit to Judge, Puck and the other leading humorous papers. Two views, one a new woman, rigged out in all the latest acquisitions of a cyclist, and the other displaying the husband attired in what looked like a mother Hubbard, carrying the baby, caused much merriment.

Miss Minnie Roney's "A Modern Portia" was rendered in an especially delightful manner, and at the conclusion Miss Roney, in a very winning manner, thanked the teachers, the audience, the trustees of the Baptist church, the ministers present, the choir and musicians and the citizens of Wauconda in particular for the courtesies extended the graduates, and in a very touching manner bid farewell to their school companions. Miss Roney completely captured the hearts of the audience. Many and beautiful were the presents and bouquets tendered the graduates.

"Ye Shepherds Tell Me," sung by a trio, was fine. Rev. W. S. Kent then addressed the class. His remarks were full of wholesome advice and instruction. After an instrumental solo by Miss Eggleston, the presentation of diplomas took place, followed by Mrs. C. K. Werden, who favored the audience with another vocal solo.

The next on the program was a march—instrumental solo—by Miss Eggleston, and it was here that Prof. R. C. Kent, the principal of the Wauconda schools, played a march on the audience. As the sweet strains of music vibrated through the building the entrance of two ushers, Messrs. Will Gilbert and Ed. Pratt, leading the way for Mrs. Frances Bangs with her daughter, Lolie, leaning on her arm, riveted the attention of the audience. Arriving at the altar Mrs. Bangs handed her daughter over to Prof. Kent, and Rev. Dobbins invoked the blessings of the Almighty on the young people, after which Rev. W. S. Kent, father of the groom, addressed a few remarks to them, which were full of love and tenderness, after which he performed the marriage ceremony. A kiss at its conclusion sealed the holy compact. The bride and groom then entered a carriage and were driven to the residence of the bride's mother, where a reception and banquet was given. The comfortable residence was crowded with the friends of the contracting parties, who came to offer their congratulations.

The bride was attired in a dress of white mulle, trimmed with white silk, pearl ornaments and valenciennes lace, and carried white roses.

Mr. and Mrs. Kent left Thursday morning for Indiana, where they will spend their honeymoon, after which they will return and reside at Wauconda.

The groom is a gentleman of sterling integrity and possesses unusual ability as an instructor, as is evidenced by the high standard the Wauconda public schools have attained while under his charge. He has the confidence and good-will of the entire community.

The bride is a young lady of charming manners, and is a general favorite of Wauconda's elite.

To Prof. and Mrs. Kent THE REVIEW offers its congratulations and wishes them long life, happiness and prosperity.

THE WOODMEN PICNIC.

The annual picnic of the Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois Association of Modern Woodman of America was held at Janesville, Wednesday. Thirty-one special trains on the Chicago and Northwestern and Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul roads brought 112 camps of the order. The parade, which took place at noon, was the longest known in the history of the order. There were twenty-four bands and six drum corps. In the afternoon thousands assembled in the courthouse park to listen to the exercises of the day. Ex-Governor W. D. Hoard, president of the association, presided. Mayor F. S. Baines delivered the address of welcome, which was responded to by ex-Governor Hoard of Fort Atkinson. The address of the day was delivered by W. A. Northcott of Greenville, Ill., head consul of the order. Music was furnished by the Elgin Band, the Amphion Quartet of Janesville and the Temple Quartet of Rockford, Ill. The prize of $25 for the best drilled team was won by camp No. 63 of Nunda, Ill. The prize of $30 for the largest and best appearing band went to Elgin, although it was opposed by the other contestants from the fact that the Elgin Band was made up as tramps and not uniformed. The prize of $20 for the largest and best appearing camp in the parade was taken by Beloit, which had 222 men in line. It is estimated that 50,000 strangers spent the day there. The day was perfect and the picnic passed off without a serious accident of any kind. Next year it will be held in De Kalb, Ill.

Among those who attended from here were: Messrs. and Mesdames H. M. Hawley, George Wagner, Chas. Flint and A. Schauble; Mrs. J. Sizer; Misses Rose Sott, Laura Frye and Alice Church, and Messrs. H. G.
