We doubt if Schaumburg people can get more fancy articles at their Center store than they can at Palatine. Our merchants are pretty well stocked in all lines.

The Palatine Register worries considerably over the fact that THE REVIEW is printed at Barrington, but we fail to see why it is not as good as having it printed in Chicago—as the Register is.

The question of organizing a camera club is being agitated. We have a large number of amateurs in town and such a club would prove profitable as well as enjoyable. Rev. F. B. Hardin is up to date on the subject and is willing to assist such a club.

The Palatine club which owns the boat house on Fox river, near Carv, met last Wednesday night and decided to change the location of the boat house to a point opposite the island about two miles up the river. This gives them better facilities for reaching their grounds and a spring near by will come in handy. The club has 17 members.

M. Richmond received a letter from Rev. A. Gilchrist, formerly pastor of Presbyterian church at Arlington Heights, and now pastor of a church in Glasgow, Scotland, the first of the week and it seems he has made a wonderful success since going there. His published report shows 108 new members during the year. There are 629 scholars in regular attendance at Sabbath schools, 58 tract distributors and 209 in the bible class.

Ray Wilson started for Georgia Monday to bring back his wife, who has failed to improve in health since going there.

Mr. and Mrs. John Umdenstock and son and Mrs. C. Vehe accompanied Wm. Umbdenstock and wife to Long Grove Sunday.

THE REVIEW now has a regular correspondent to write up school news each week. Clarence Bennett is doing editorial work at present.

THE REVIEW is a sound, conservative paper. It does not aim to be sensational nor make a big splurge over something which amounts to nothing.

Bert L. and Ray Smith have each secured positions as stenographers with Chicago firms. Frank Knigge is working in the general office of the C. & N. W. Ry.

Matt and Cath. Richmond started for St. Paul Sunday to attend the annual curling matches at that place. Our two townsmen have been showing up well in the games.

School Notes.

The Acme Debating society of the Palatine high school is making the best of progress in the art of speaking. This branch of study is one of the most important of the high school because it acquaints the scholars with the character of a business meeting, as well as giving them practice in speaking before audiences. The programs which the society has scheduled are such as will be interesting to all and it is the desire of the society to have occasional visitors.

The officers of the society for the next month are as follows: President, Carl Volker; 1st vice-president, Clarence Comfort; 2d vice-president, Mabel Wayman; recording secretary, Mattie Hodgkins; corresponding secretary, Roland Bentler; editor, George Zimmer; assistant editor, Adah Meade.

The grip is keeping many from attending school. The first room suffers most and the second room least of all.

Miss Avalee Hopkins visited South Evanston schools Monday and was taken with the grip Tuesday and Wednesday. Miss Clara Harrison taught in her place.

A. J. Roberts, the impersonator and elocutionist, who was in Palatine a year ago, will be with us again Thursday, January 26. Everybody turn out and give him a surprise by your presence. Admission 15 and 25 cents.

How to Prevent Pneumonia.

You are perhaps aware that pneumonia always results from a cold or from an attack of la grippe. During the epidemic of la grippe a few years ago when so many cases resulted in pneumonia, it was observed that the attack was never followed by that disease when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy was used. It counteracts any tendency of a cold or la grippe to result in that dangerous disease. It is the best remedy in the world for bad colds and la grippe. Every bottle warranted. For sale by A. S. Olms, Palatine; A. L. Waller, Barrington.

BE SURE TO ATTEND.

Officers of the Farmers' Institute to be Elected at Stott's Hall.

MEETING AT 8:30 THIS MORNING.

Everybody is Earnestly Requested to be Present and Take an Active Part to Make the Institute an Assured Fact.

At the meeting held at Stott's hall Monday morning for the purpose of electing officers to the Farmers' Institute the attendance was so small that the meeting was adjourned to this (Saturday) morning at 8:30 o'clock sharp.

The Farmers' Institute is becoming popular in nearly every county in the state. The benefits derived from such meetings are of great value to all who attend. To the people whose vocation is farming an opportunity is afforded conveniently at home to listen to prominent men hailing from different parts of the state, each of whom being well versed by practical experience and study in some special branch of this great industry.

The institute held in Barrington last year, though being the first held in Western Cook county, was a grand success and the large crowds attracted to each of the daily sessions only evinced the fact that the public fully appreciated the value of such meetings. If the institute is held in Barrington this year every effort will be made to have it surpass that of last year in every way.

Attend the meeting this morning and put your shoulder to the wheel and show that you are willing not only to do your share toward having the institute held in Barrington but in making it a success as well.

A Much Needed Improvement.

It has been apparent for some time that Palatine needed a better system of lighting the streets than is now furnished by the oil lamps. Several members of the Village Board have been studying on the problem of lighting streets better without the enormous cost necessary to put in an electric light plant, which the village could not put in for several years at least, as the village is bonded to pay off the costs of water works plant.

After considerable investigation several parties have decided that an acetylene gas plant would meet the requirements and at the same time would not make a special expense to the village. Acetylene gas is generated from carbide and water and not only makes a strong and clear light, but is as cheap to burn as kerosene oil. Insurance on property is not affected by such lighting and the cost of putting in the apparatus for making gas is as cheap as putting in kerosene lamps. A machine for 60 lights costs about $165.00. The cost of laying pipes would be very small, as they would have to be laid only about two feet under the surface. To consumers the cost would be about the same as they now pay for kerosene lamps and the acetylene gas gives a much more powerful and white light.

This gas is coming into use all over America and Germany, and wherever used is pronounced successful and satisfactory. One of our prominent merchants contemplated putting in a private plant, but has deferred buying until he sees what the village will do. Let us have light at a small cost, and at the same time satisfactory.

MY POOR WIFE.

BY J. P. SMITH.

"My dear boy, wait a moment, just a moment," pleaded my uncle, his hand grasping my arm. "We will give you all the particulars we have gleaned. Don't—don't be afraid. Unfortunately up to the present we—we have no reliable clue to your wife's whereabouts more than the letter has probably given you; but we hope—"

"There's her hat—the hat she always wears in the garden; it looks all wet and muddy—she must have dropped it in the grass. Give it to me—give it to me! Finlay, what on earth have you jingling there? It—it looks—"

"I don't know what it is; do you recognize it, Mr. Dennys?" he answered, holding up a block of bruised metal from which hung a light rusted chain entangled in a rag of blue ribbon.

"That rubbish?—no. At first in the shade there I thought it looked not unlike a steel girdle and chateleine my wife wears—one that I bought her at the Palais Royal last spring. I—I don't know what put it into my head. Give me the hat. Where was it found? Answer me, answer me! Are you all struck dumb?"

Then they told me, two or three of them taking up one another nervously, that the hat was picked up the morning before by the children of the Grange lodge in a bed of rushes down the river; that the chain and mass of metal had been found twisted round the big wheel of the Red Mill, and that it was recognized by Carter, my wife's maid, as part of the chateleine she undoubtedly wore the day she disappeared.

"You—you wish me to understand that my wife went down the river under the mill machinery, like the girl long ago? You—you want me to believe that? Great heavens!"

"My dear boy—no, no. As long as there is no further confirmation, of course we—we must hope for the best; but—but you see, unfortunately the night was dark, and the river unusually swollen; it is so dangerous down by that broken bridge, so easy to miss one's footing in the—the—I say, catch him, catch him! Oh, poor fellow, he's falling!"

I saw their faces crowding round me, the room seemed to heave convulsively, and then I remembered nothing more for many weeks.

CHAPTER XVI.

One cold gusty evening in October, seven years after the pen had fallen from Paul Dennys' hand, two women, wearing the garb of the good Sisters of Nazareth, wended their way across the little country churchyard of Colworth and stood silently before a white marble cross bearing the following inscription—

"Sacred to the memory of Helen, the beloved wife of Paul Dennys, of Colworth, who died 22nd of July, 187—, aged 19."

"It stood a few yards away from the huge stone monument under which generations of Dennyses slept, the reeds and rushes from the river, flowing close by, rustling mournfully around it, making the spot so dismal and ghostly that the elder sister, a woman of a vigorous and unimaginative disposition, shuddered involuntarily and exclaimed half-pettishly to her silent companion—

"Well, sister, is our journey at an end? Is this the spot we have traveled over two hundred miles to visit?"

"Yes. I wanted to know if this Helen Dennys was buried here, and I find she is. I am ready to go back now, Sister Agatha, when you wish." She stooped to pick a spray of ivy growing round the cross, held it in her hand irresolutely for a moment, then flung it into the river and moved heavily away.

"No; wait a moment and rest yourself—you look quite exhausted. Don't sit on the grass, child; do you wish to get your death of cold? Sit here on the slab beside me," cried Sister Agatha, laying a motherly hand on her companion's shoulder.

She obeyed, tossing back her heavy crape veil, and lifted a wan listless face to the low murky sky.

"Poor Helen!" she sighed presently, with a weak laugh. "They haven't given her a very dry bed, have they? They might have moved her a little farther, even though it were only her memory mouldering there."

Sister Agatha made no reply, but read aloud the inscription, commenting softly, aged nineteen. That was young to bid good-by to earthly happiness. Was this Helen a relation—any one you loved—Sister Clothilde?"

"I knew her all her life; though she died young in years, she was old in sorrow."

"And yet she was beloved?"

"So the stone says—so the stone says. Oh, sister, sister," burst out the young nun, with a sudden, bitter cry, "of all the lies, uttered or recorded in this world of lies, there are none—none, I say—so shameful, so barefaced as those that defile the graveyards of our land!"

"Hush, hush, my dear sister!" reproved the elder, in a shocked voice. "Pray, pray compose yourself—you do not know what you are saying; how unbecoming—"

"Let me speak, let me speak now. It will do me good, and I will be silent after that for the rest of my life! Let me tell you the story of the 'beloved' wife who lies here; it will do me good."

"Very well, my dear, if it will ease your mind, I will listen," she answered soothingly, looking at her companion with keen anxious glance.

"It's not a long story, and a common-place one enough. She—that Helen—lived up in the red house the chimneys of which you can see smoking among the trees, and she believed herself beloved as that cross asserts she was; but in a very short time she found out her mistake—found out her husband had only married her out of pique and disappointment—that he loved another woman fairer than she. Her rival came to stay in the house with her; the wife was tried, tortured, maddened to despair, and one day she disappeared from her home, leaving a letter saying she had gone never to return. No trace was found of her, but after a few days sufficient evidence was had to lead her husband to believe that she had been drowned in that river flowing there under the wall, and her body ground to pieces in some mill machinery half a mile further down."

"What a horrible story! Poor soul—poor soul! Was it proved to be accidental or otherwise?"

"That no one will know until the day all things will be made known. They have not judged her harshly here; let not us do otherwise."

"And the husband, sister?"

"He—the story says—went raving about the country seeking her, at first, as if he had lost the treasure of his life, and, five months after her death, married her rival."

"Five months?"

"Five months. They live very happily together now surrounded with their children. That's the whole story, and it ends in the orthodox style with a happy marriage, you see. Now let us go, or we shall miss our train."

With a glance toward the chimneys, Sister Agatha put her arm within her companion's, and they walked quickly and silently through the long wet grass, over the old bridge above the mill, to the station half a mile away. When they arrived there the up train was slowly moving away from the platform, and to their dismayed inquiries the station-master informed them there would not be another until 1.15. It was then only half-past seven. Four dreary hours stretched before them, to be got rid of—how? Sister Agatha, who had been up the three preceding nights nursing the sick, and who had a week of hard work before her, prior to her departure for New Zealand, where she, her companion, and three other nuns were going to found a convent, lost no time in making up her mind how to dispose of the time before them. Seating herself in a retired corner of the waiting-room, she fell into a heavy sleep, after having urged her companion to follow her example.

Clothilde tried to do so, but it was in vain, sleep would not come. Visions of past days, past happiness, hope, and sorrow floated before her—voices she had loved before she left the world sounded in her ears.

When the last train from town arrived, the quiet station became a scene of bustle and excitement—porters, guards, passengers flitted hurriedly by, doors were slammed; but Sister Agatha slept placidly through it all, and her companion drawing her thick veil over her hideous funnel-shaped bonnet, shrank farther into her corner. Two or three travelers invaded the room for a moment, then hurried out, and the train slowly moved on. Clothilde had just pushed aside her stifling veil, when the door opened again, and a plump ungloved hand, sparkling with diamonds, thrust two children hastily in, a gay, vibrating voice, that sent the blood rushing to the nun's white face, calling out—

"Children, stay there until nurse comes to fetch you; don't attempt to leave this room. Percy, take care of your sister, do you hear?"

"Don't be afraid, Cissy, I'll take care of you," said the boy, a beautiful child of about five with golden curls falling over his face. "The room is dark, but—"

"Who are you? What's your name? Tell me quick—quick—I must know!"

The little fellow started back, threw his arm around his sister, as he stared awe-struck into the white face and burning eyes of a woman in a long black cloak towering over him, a woman he had never seen before, yet whom he knew perfectly on the moment—the white witch of Carving Knife Cave who sucked the blood of crying children, that nurse told them about when they were naughty.

"I am Percy Edward Stopford Dennys of Colworth, and this is my sister Edith Cicely Stopford Dennys, and—oh," quavered the child, his hands clasped entreatingly, "if you will let us off this time, we will never—never be naughty again, never stick pins into Reggie, or get out of our cots in the night, or—"

"Hush—hush! I am not going to touch you. Go away—away into that corner near the door. Don't speak to me—don't look at me again, and you are safe. Go—go!"

They went; and Helen Dennys, who was supposed to have been drowned seven years ago, sank back into her seat and covered her face with her hands in a passion of despair and stormy revolt, almost as fierce as that which swept her the morning she tried to take her husband's life.

CHAPTER XVII.

Presently the door opened again, and a portly nurse, laden with a gorgeously-clad baby, waddled in, speedily followed by the owner of the gay voice and begemmed fingers, namely, Mrs. Dennys of Colworth, a stately well-conditioned lady, on whose lovely blooming face not the faintest trace of shame, remorse, regret lingered—a face that was the embodiment of supreme self-satisfaction and unshadowed prosperity. Helen looked into it long and deeply with hungry eyes, then turned to the wall, when a shower of hot tears dimmed her sight.

"I tell you, Halpin, the box is somewhere in the station; the porter distinctly saw it being lifted out of the last train, and I won't leave the station until it is found. I really never met such a helpless and stupid woman as you; it is unbearable!" cried Mrs. Dennys angrily, stamping her foot.

"Hullo, Hullo, wife, what's the storm about?" interposed a man's voice. "Is half your nursery missing, or what?"

"My bonnet-box from Elsie's is missing, Mr. Dennys, and I am telling Halpin that I won't leave the station until it is forthcoming; I'll not have the history of my emerald bracelet repeated."

Mr. Dennys made a half-soothing, half-bantering reply; at the same time, seizing his little girl, he perched her on his shoulder. The child clung to him fearfully, her eyes fixed upon the dark figure, which nobody seemed to notice.

Helen's lips moved in incoherent terrific prayer, her hands pressed to her eyes.

"Help me, help me, O Heaven!" she prayed. "Oh, do not desert me after seven years' struggle, don't let my sacrifice be all in vain! I have suffered, I have struggled! Oh, for pity's sake help me now, or I—I ruin—ruin him I love! Paul, Paul, if you love your wife, your children, your happy home, go—go quick, before my strength leaves me, before I look at you—before I look at you again."

She leaned forward rocking herself to and fro in the fever of temptation, moaning feebly, until some one touched her upraised arm, and her hand fell instinctively. Edith's husband was standing beside her, speaking to her.

"I beg your pardon, madam, there is a parcel under your seat. Would you allow me to see if it is the one we are looking for No, it is not; thanks. I am sorry for disturbing you."

He moved away, not a gleam of recognition in his face, and she looked after him dumbly, her hands lying on her lap.

At first she could not see him plainly for a red mist shrouded her eyes; but it passed away, and he stood clear before her, a man in the prime of life; stalwart and shapely, with a handsome sunny face as insouciant, free from remorse and care as Edith's own, a man whom the world used well, who had obeyed her last request in the spirit as well as the letter. Changed; oh, so little changed since the summer days long ago, when she watched him died on her lips, the tumult in her—her god among men—a little fuller in the body and redder in face, but otherwise unchanged, unchanged!

Little Ethel—"Mamma, I wish you'd wash Willie Prettie's face." Mamma—"The idea! He's a neighbor's little boy. I have nothing to do with him." Little Ethel—"But I have. We've become engaged, and I want to kiss him."

Naphtha Launch Belonging to Lawrence Jones of Louisville Has Not Reached Its Destination—Miss Florence Taggart of Indianapolis on Board.

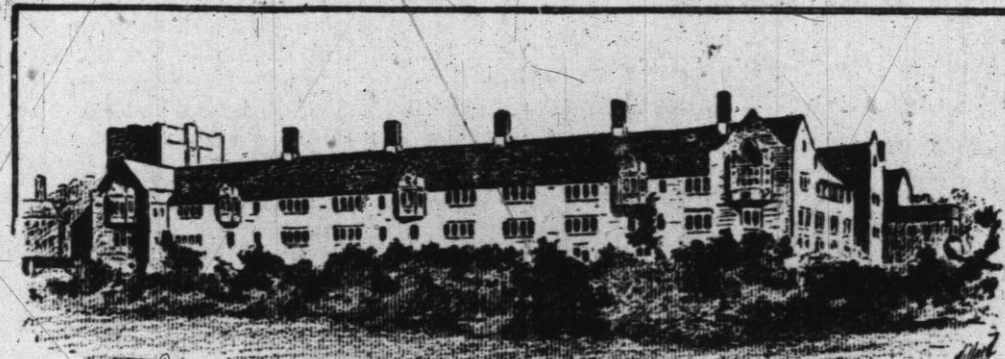

The naphtha launch Paul Jones, belonging to Lawrence Jones, the well-known distiller of Louisville, Ky., has not arrived at its destination, and the gravest fears are entertained for the safety of the little yacht and those on board. A steam tug has left Mobile to search for the missing launch.

The party on board was composed of Miss Florence Taggart, daughter of Mayor Taggart of Indianapolis; Col. William Yocum and his daughter and his son; H. C. Yocum of St. Louis; Miss Margie Woodland of Chicago. The party left Louisville Dec. 7.

It has been ascertained that the yacht carried a plentiful supply of food and naphtha fuel to avoid suffering in case of delay. The launch was about sixty feet in length and was not adapted for heavy seas.

Good Year for America.

Liverpool, Jan. 17.—The United States consul at this port, James Boyle, in his annual report to the state department, forwarded yesterday, says that the year just passed has been the best on record as concerns importations of American products, and that from all indications a continued growth may be expected. This showing is the more gratifying, as he explains, from the fact that Liverpool imports generally have materially declined, though the customs revenue is now increasing. Confidence is felt, he declares, that the British foreign trade will revive with the spread of technical education.

Heroes of the War with Spain

Thousands of them, are suffering from lingering diseases induced by life in poisonous southern camps, the result of changes of climate, or of imperfect nutrition caused by improper and badly cooked food. Sleeping on the ground has doubtless developed rheumatism in hundreds who were predisposed to the disease. In such cases the Boys of '98 may take a lesson from the experience of the

Heroes of the Civil War.

Hundreds of the Boys of '63 have testified to the efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People in driving out malaria, rheumatism and other diseases contracted during their days of hardship and privation in the army. These pills are the best tonic in the world.

Asa Robinson, of Mt. Sterling, Ill., is a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the 83rd Pennsylvania Volunteers. He went to the war a vigorous farmer's boy and came back broken in health, a victim of sciatic rheumatism. Most of the time he was unfit for manual labor of any kind, and his sufferings were at all times intense. He says: "Nothing seemed to give me permanent relief until three years ago, when my attention was called to some of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I had not taken more than half a box when I noticed an improvement in my condition, and I kept on improving steadily. To them
I owe my restoration to health. They are a grand remedy."—Mt. Sterling

SILENCE ON WARSHIPS.

The Absence of Noise Leads Efficiency to the Service.
In an address delivered before the American Medical association at its last annual session Passed Assistant Surgeon J. A. Guthrie of the United States navy, well known in this city, made some very interesting remarks on the subject of "Noise and Nerves," speaking of the great value of silence on board the modern man-of-war, says the Washington Star. He said: "In certain land-locked harbors I have heard the inhabitants complaining of tugs and other noisy boats blowing off their whistles, especially those known as calliopes. The would-be waggishness, or to-what-purpose desire, of these tug captains, deserves a compensation suited to the perpetrator. Have not the cartoonists discovered the tired and irritated visitor from the provinces, racking his brains in the uproar-ous city, unable to collect his faculties; and has the father, night-shirted and capped, marching the colicky infant in the small hours of the night, escaped this artist's humorous vein? All these things call to light the necessity for a scientific investigation of useless noise. In a few cities it has been proposed passing an ordinance against the ringing of church bells—this may to some disturb the "day of rest"—but why not include in this an ordinance for week days; the shouting of street hawkers, the clanging of other varieties of bells, the steam whistle of the factory? How much better is the silent signal, both in war and in peace; take the popular football game and we find that the teams under better control are those who have mastered the silent signals of command. One reason the modern war vessel is so deadly may be said to be because it is absolutely as accurate as a floating battery can be; and is not the cause of this accuracy due in great measure to the silent commands sent from the conning tower by the captains to each of his subordinates, shut off from him and each other by walls of steel? When an order is indicated upon a dial manipulated by electric transmission one receives the same in a tranquil state of mind; but if the order is shouted at him by one, two, three or more in rapid succession (as of yore) they there is excuse for confusion."

Temperatures of Boiling Water.
Water boils at different temperatures, according to the elevation above the sea level. In London water boils practically at 212 degrees F.; at Munich, in Germany at 209½ degrees; at the City of Mexico, in Mexico, at 200 degrees, and in the Himalayas, at an elevation of 18,000 feet above the level of the sea, at 180 degrees. These differences are caused by the varying pressure of the atmosphere at these points. In London the whole weight of the air has to be overcome. In Mexico, 7,000 feet above the sea, there are 7,000 feet less of atmosphere to be resisted; consequently less heat is required, and boiling takes place at a lower temperature.

A Spanish Custom.
The custom of wearing orange blossoms in the hair originated in Spain, and not in England. In fact, many of the Spanish peasant girls very seldom wear hats or bonnets of any kind, preferring to adorn their heads with a covering of flowers instead.

The grammar of many people is so bad that it would kill them to have to eat their words.

Disappointment and Triumph.
Dark the theater, hushed the music, for the play is o'er tonight.
And the actress, driving homeward, sits with lips compressed and tight.

Roses red and white and yellow litter up the carriage space—Tributes to her matchless acting—yet a tear slips down her face.

What if hundreds did applaud her—what if well she played her part?
People were like driven cattle—could they read a woman's heart?

All the loves that night she'd acted—all the hates and hopes and fears Filter through her tired brain cells—come out purified as tears.

Men, my brothers; men, the workers,
when the world has used us rough Round our hearts we strap our armor—women are of softer stuff.

What to her was this night's conquest?
What the flowers and success?
For the modiste disappointed—never sent her satin dress.

Never sent the dress she'd hoped for—trimmed with pansies down the side, Jewel trimming on the shoulders, round point sixteen inches wide!

Well she knew that with that dress on Soldiers in all his pride Couldn't hold a candle to her—ah, no wonder that she cried!

Then she smiled—for on the morrow,
when the papers told her hits,
She would go to that old modiste and would give the woman fits!

"I could not sleep at night, had to walk

State of Affairs in Turkey.

Some information furnished by a writer evidently fresh from the scenes themselves to the New York Evening Post, about the condition of affairs in Turkey shows that the condition must be terrible indeed if what he says is true. The sultan, he declares, follows the policy of putting everybody out of the way who is likely to oppose him, and since the Armenian massacres no less than 4,000 active men have disappeared mysteriously from Constantinople, no one knowing what became of them. It was not long ago that there appeared in one of the newspapers a few lines of caution to Moslems to be on their guard for the defense of their liberties. The sultan thought that the warning came from a certain club of Young Turks who were understood to be too progressive in their views. At any rate, in one night, directly after that, 340 of the members of that club disappeared, and it has been utterly impossible to find any trace of them since. It is in this way that the sultan keeps the upper hand of his subjects and prevents the formation of political plots. The writer of this strange story intimates very plainly that it is the opinion in Constantinople that these men were taken out into the Bosphorus at night and drowned.

The millionaire Thomas Tinsley of Texas furnishes a fine example of the futile stubbornness that tries to fight the whole common and statutory law single handed. Tinsley removed from New York to Texas and began operating at once. He purchased $100,000 worth of defaulted bonds at a nominal figure and then got them legally raised to par. Then he went into the cemetery real estate business, getting control of the biggest cemetery in the state, which he ran on the installment plan. He immediately raised the price of lots 50 per cent and let the improvements go to grass. Then the lot owners kicked and got a receivership, but Tinsley would not turn over the books or make an accounting. He returned to New York. When he revisited Texas, he was arrested, fined for contempt and sent to jail. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus, but the court of appeals sustained the imprisonment. Then he went to the supreme court, and there the appeal was dismissed. Undeterred, he went to the federal district court on the ground that he was not a citizen of Texas, and when the case went against him he tried the United States supreme court and was once more beaten. Finally he appealed to the British consul, claiming to be a British subject, but this failed, and he remained locked up. He had now been two years making his fight from a prison, and last week he gave in, appeared in court, gave up the books and attempted to purge himself of contempt. What a lot of trouble it causes some men to measure forces, and how expensive their mistake very often is!

The two important matters to be taken up at the reassembling of congress will be the ratification of the treaty of peace and the consideration of the Nicaraguan canal. It is understood that there will be some opposition in the senate to the ratification of the treaty, Senator Hale having allowed it to be publicly stated that he will oppose it. In spite of this, however, it is generally believed that the work of the peace commission will be ratified. Interest in the Nicaraguan canal at present centers in the negotiation with regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. But the extra official attitude of England and America leaves little room to doubt that England will consent to the abrogation of an outworn treaty. The discussion of the matter in the press of the two countries goes on in a friendly spirit, and, although the Liberal press of Great Britain has claimed that the present status should not be altered without some equivalent advantage to England, there is good reason to believe that the final adjustment will be amicably made on the lines of American control and the adoption of the principles that govern the Suez canal.

America Can Feed the World.

Few people have any definite idea of the wheat producing capacity of the world or of their own country, but Sir William Crookes' recent doleful fears that the world would soon be unable to feed itself have been met by a competent authority in Mr. Edward Atkinson. Sir William declared that the world's supply of wheat was 2,000,000,000 bushels, and that in 30 years the demand will increase 1,270,000,000 bushels, and by that time all the arable land in the world will be in use, and he saw no prospect of producing the bushels additional that would be required by the world. Mr. Atkinson points out that two-thirds of the land in America, without counting Alaska, is susceptible of cultivation, and that on one-tenth of it enough wheat can be grown to feed the whole world. At present America produces from 600,000,000 to 700,000,000 bushels, about one-third of the total consumption, on a fraction of about 2 per cent of its soil. He shows that Minnesota and the two Dakotas this year produced 180,000,000 bushels, or more than enough to meet the English deficit. This amount was grown on 20,000 square miles, or one-eighth of the arable land of those states. In other words, if Minnesota and the two Dakotas were to go into wheat production to their full capacity they would double the amount now raised by the whole United States, which would be four-fifths of the world's present consumption. These are startling glimpses of the resources of America, and nobody dares to dispute them.

What the newspaper man calls the "statistical fiend" has applied his mind to the elevator and proves beyond all cavil that there are fewer accidents and risks to life while going up or coming down on the ordinary steam or electrical lift than the average human being encounters at his own dinner table. More men, it seems, have been choked to death or poisoned by mistaking toast-stools for mushrooms while sitting comfortably in their own family circles than have been killed in the elevator. People who feel that this is incontrovertible will nevertheless understand that steel ropes do break and weights do fall and men do occasionally get cut in two by the elevator with a neatness and dispatch equaled only by the trolley car, and that, after all, when it comes to a matter of choice, it may be more serene to die at one's dinner table. The man of ordinary sense who doesn't exist altogether on statistics will probably feel that the elevators, like the railroad systems, breed a feeling of careless security simply by the habit of trusting them, and that is probably the worst thing about them. The moment we settle down to the belief that they will continue to work all right, so far as we are concerned, they take it into their machinery to work wrong. They have to be watched, examined, held to a constant scrutiny. It is when the builders, the operators and the passengers confidently rely on a thing working well today because it worked well last week that statistics become a sickening snare and a delusion.

It is openly stated that Ghani Bey, the sultan's aid-de-camp who was recently murdered, was killed by the sultan's orders. He was probably the most consummate as well as the most privileged villain in Constantinople. No bandit of the middle ages robbed, blackmailed and killed with such impunity. Ghani Bey was the Albanian colonel of the household troops, who are held at the Yildiz kiosk to protect the sultan himself. It was in carrying out the imperial orders that the colonel acquired his infamous European reputation. For 15 years the ambassadors of the great powers have demanded his removal without avail. It was only when the sultan grew suspicious of him that an order was given to some spy to shoot him. The murder took place in broad daylight before a score of witnesses, but made no particular sensation in the city, and nobody expected justice to pay any attention to it. Such occurrences as this, continually repeated, find their way to the astonished people of Europe at intervals, and they are so far away from the modern spirit as to be utterly incredible.

Jean de Reszke is to have the management of a lyric theater in Paris which a syndicate is building for him. The other day he made the remarkable statement that it was his intention to give Paris operas and plays that should be up to the New York standard. Twenty-five years ago such a statement would have been regarded in Paris as a symptom of paresis.

Religious devotion is not always piety, nor is virtue always sanctity. In the attitude of the world be saint or devotee there is sometimes that offensive form of pride which breeds humility. It is what the poet calls a spread of the hand.

Very little has leaked out about the international antianarchist convention which has been sitting in Rome for several weeks, but what little is known points to an agreement of the powers to a new and more effective method of dealing with the enemies of society. It is understood that the representatives of the different governments were in agreement, that they refused to recognize anarchists as political criminals and that a better co-operative police system and a more speedy method of punishment will be the outcome of the convention.

The queen of England has virtually turned down the Duke of Orleans, and French royalist circles are fustily bitter on account of it. But her majesty sturdily refused to entertain the duke and duchess in spite of all the efforts made at the court of Vienna. When one considers that official etiquette has not been able to move her, Saxon respect for the austere virtues of Queen Victoria must be immeasurably increased.

AN EPIDEMIC OF GRIP.

Some Precautions Necessary to Prevent Its Spread.

Influenza or grip is becoming epidemic and physicians who have made expert examinations declare that there is no difficulty in identifying the genuine Pfeiffer grip germ which causes Russian influenza. A physician says the discharges from the air passages of those suffering with the disease are found to be teeming with the germs and are highly contagious. A susceptible person who comes in contact with the air contaminated by the coughing or sneezing of one afflicted with influenza will contract the disease. The contagion in most cases, however, is conveyed from hand to hand and thus to the mouth. The hands of a careless individual who has influenza will affect everything that he touches—door knobs, newspapers, food and the hands of his friends.

The best preventive against this or any other contagion is clean hands, a clean mouth and clean food. Hands should be frequently washed, especially before partaking of candy, fruit or any other food held in the hands. During the epidemic everyone should cleanse the mouth and gargle the throat night and morning with an antiseptic wash prepared by a physician. Overwork and loss of sleep, which reduce vital resistance, should be avoided. Sunlight and fresh air are the great germ destroyers; a lack of them is most favorable to the spread of influenza. Sleeping rooms especially should be aired and exposed to the sun's rays during the day.—Elgin Courier.

The Ravages of Grip.

That modern scourge, the grip, poisons the air with its fatal germs so that no home is safe from its ravages, but multitudes have found a sure protection against this dangerous malady in Dr. King's New Discovery. When you feel a soreness in your bones and muscles, have chills and fever, with sore throat, pain in the back of the head, catarrhal symptoms and a stubborn cough you may know you have the grip, and that you need Dr. King's New Discovery. It will promptly cure the worst cough, heal the inflamed membranes, kill the disease germs and prevent the dreaded after effects of the malady. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Money back if not cured. A trial bottle free at H. T. Abbott's drug store.

Annual Convention of the National Creamery Buttermakers' Association.

On account of the above, which will be held at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, January 23-29, excursion tickets to Sioux Falls, via the North-Western Line, will be sold January 21-24, good until January 31, 1899, at greatly reduced rates. Apply to agent for full particulars.

LaGrippe Successfully Treated.

"I have just recovered from the second attack of la grippe this year," says Mr. Jas. A. Jones, publisher of the Leader, Mexia, Texas. "In the latter case I used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and I think with considerable success, only being in bed a little over two days against ten days for the former attack. The second attack I am satisfied would have been equally as bad as the first but for the use of this remedy, as I had to go to bed in about six hours after being 'struck' with it, while in the first case I was able to attend to business about two days before getting 'down.'" For sale by A. S. Olms, Palatine; A. L. Waller, Barrington.

The horse race on the lake Saturday was easily won by Walter R., J. F. Roney's two-year old. The first heat, however, was won by Hall B., but after F. Roney delivered the reins to C. E. Mead, Walter R. left his opponent way in the background. We understand there is soon to be another match arranged for $25 or $50.

We understand that E. J. Monahan, formerly of this village, and who for the past two years has been employed in Chicago, left New York city Tuesday with the "Fighting Fourth" for Manila. He will, no doubt, have a trip worth much, but there are also many hardships to endure. We hope to see him return home again safely and relate to us his adventures in the Orient.

Justice Fitch's office was the scene of a lawsuit Wednesday afternoon. The parties in dispute were Otto Waelti of this village against Mrs. L. Ficke of Lake Zurich. The following is the testimony offered by Wm. Waelti: "While at Lake Zurich on New Year's Day I stopped at the Zurich House about noon and left my horse and rig in their charge. When I was ready to return in the evening I found the robe was missing and was nowhere to be found. After returning home I had two letters written to Mrs. Ficke in regard to same but received no reply, so decided the only way to get justice was by law and instituted suit." Mrs. Ficke did not appear and judgment was rendered against her for the robe and the costs attached to the case.

Grip's Ravages Doomed.

So much misery and so many deaths have been caused by the grip that every one should know what a wonderful remedy for this malady is found in Dr. King's New Discovery. HONOR DINGLEY'S MEMORY.

Funeral Services Over the Body of the Maine Statesman Retards Business—Both Houses of Congress Adjourn in Respect to His Memory.

Friday, Jan. 13.

The house consumed the day in a debate on the naval personnel bill. In the senate Mr. McLaurin (dem., S. C.) took strong ground in a carefully prepared speech against a policy of expansion by this country. Mr. Allen (Neb.) introduced a resolution for the appointment of a committee of five senators to make full inquiry into the conduct of the late war between the United States and Spain. It went over. Mr. Gray (Del.) introduced a joint resolution for a medal to be presented to Miss Helen Gould as a testimonial of her benevolence to the soldiers. The resolution was referred to the committee on military affairs.

Saturday, Jan. 14.

The house passed the naval personnel bill without division on the final passage. Three important amendments were adopted: one creates a judge-advocate's corps, another abolishes prize money and a third provides for the retirement on three-quarter pay of enlisted men and petty officers in the navy after thirty years' service. Almost the entire session of the senate was devoted to consideration of the pending Nicaragua canal bill.

CAREER OF THE LATE CONGRESSMAN DINGLEY.

Story of His Career.

Nelson Dingley, Jr., governor of Maine 1874-'76, and member of congress from the Second congressional district of Maine since 1881, was born in Durham, Androscoggin county, Me., in his Grandfather Lambert's farmhouse, on the banks of the Androscoggin river, Feb. 15, 1832, son of Nelson and Jane (Lambert) Dingley.

In 1838 the family removed to Unity, Waldo county, and thence, in 1854, to Auburn, Androscoggin county.

At 17 Mr. Dingley taught a winter school in the To. of China, fourteen miles from home, and he continued to teach winters while fitting for college. In 1850, at the age of 18, he entered Waterville (Me.) Academy and there completed his preparation for college. Entering Waterville College (now Colby University) in 1851, he remained there a year and a half and then became a student at Dartmouth College, from which institution he was graduated in 1855 with high rank as a scholar, debater, and writer. After leaving college Mr. Dingley studied law in 1855-'56, and in the latter year he was admitted to the bar. Instead of entering upon the practice of law he decided to become a journalist, for which profession he always manifested a decided taste. In September, 1856, he purchased the Lewiston Journal, of which he had been practically the editor while studying law, and to which platform. He actively participated in the presidential campaign of 1876 and in the state conventions of 1877, 1878, 1879. In 1879-'80 he was chairman of the Republican executive committee. In 1881 Mr. Dingley was nominated by the Republicans of the Second congressional district of Maine to fill the vacancy in congress caused by the resignation of William P. Frye. He was elected by a majority of over 5,000, nearly twice as large as ever before given to any candidate in that district. He served on the committee on banking and currency and as a member of the select committee on alcoholic liquor traffic and during the session he presided several times over the house in committee of the whole. Mr. Dingley's first speech in congress was made April 25, 1882, on "Protection to American Shipping."

Work for American Shipping.

Under a joint resolution introduced into the house by Mr. Dingley and passed Aug. 7, 1882, he was appointed a member of a joint committee to investigate the condition and wants of American shipbuilding and shipowning interests. The report of the committee, drawn up by Mr. Dingley and unanimously agreed to by the committee, was regarded as an able and valuable document. The committee reported a bill to remove certain burdens on American shipping, framed by Mr. Dingley, which passed the house, elected to the Fiftieth Congress, and again elected to the Fifty-first Congress in 1888, to the Fifty-second in 1890, the Fifty-third in 1892, the Fifty-fourth in 1894, the Fifty-fifth in 1896 by large and increased majorities. In the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses he was an active member of the committee on appropriations.

Declines Place in the Cabinet.

In forming his cabinet prior to entering on the duties of chief executive, March 4, 1897, President McKinley tendered the position of Secretary of the treasury to Mr. Dingley, but he declined the offer, preferring to remain in his position as chairman of the ways and means committee and floor leader of the Republican majority of the house.

Under his lead the house, within sixteen days after the Fifty-fifth congress was convened in extraordinary session on March 15, 1897, by President McKinley, passed a bill revising the tariff. Mr. Dingley was a Congressionalist in religion. He was married June 11, 1857, to Miss Salmoe McKenney of Auburn, Me. They have had six children.

Dingley's Career in Congress.

When Mr. Dingley was first elected to congress he received a majority of 5,000 votes, nearly twice as many as had ever been given to any candidate in that district; he was elected to the Fifty fifth congress by a majority of almost 14,000 votes. When he entered congress he was made a member of the committee on banking and currency, serving there eight years.

At the beginning of his congressional career the country was disturbed on the question of the extension of charters of the National Bank association. He immediately identified himself with a bill for the extension of the charters of the banks, and in the face of much opposition helped fight the bill through. The opposition to the re-emption of specie payment had not been dissipated and Mr. Dingley had no small part in befriending the government in its policy.

But it is difficult to name any important legislation in congress of the last fifteen years with which he was not identified. His first speech in congress was made April 25, 1882, on "Protection to American Shipping." While he had been active in financial matters he was thoroughly informed on shipping, having come from a state with large shipping interests.

It was through his influence that a select committee on shipowners and ship interests was created in the house. He was at the head of the minority of that committee, whose successor has been the present useful committee on merchant marine and fisheries.

Dingley in Forty-Eighth Congress.

In the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth and Fiftieth congresses there was a great deal of agitation in favor of subsidizing American ships to carry the mails. Mr. Dingley was a hearty champion of this, and framed the bill which finally became law paying to American ships of certain register and speed a compensation for transporting American mails.

In the Fifty first congress he was given membership by Speaker Reed, whose right arm he has been in recent years, on the ways and means committee. When the political wheel turned in the Fifty-second congress and the Democrats succeeded to power Speaker Crisp felt that he must name Mr. Reed to the committee on ways and means. Mr. Dingley was, accordingly, transferred to the minority of the committee on appropriations.

Dingley's Early Life.

Mr. Dingley's father was a trader, not particularly well-to-do, and the boy bent himself to work at an early age. His steadiness of purpose came from his old Puritan stock, but his intellectual ability came from his mother, a woman educated far beyond her station or the average of cultivation in those days. She was a school teacher and brought all the discipline and knowledge of her mind to bear upon the training of her son, and he found her influence one of the greatest factors in his success.

Hence it was quite natural when, in 1856, he found an opportunity to secure the ownership of the Lewiston Journal, then a weekly paper, that he seized it at once and began to build up a business that has been wonderfully successful.

"My paper," he would say with pride, "has a larger circulation than any other paper in the state of Maine. I would rather write for it than do any other kind of work." He added a daily edition in 1861.

When William P. Frye was elevated to the senate, Mr. Dingley was sent to congress. That was in 1881. Immediately the young statesman found that the seed which he had been sowing for so many years was in congenial soil. All that he had gathered of tariff knowledge, financial facts and theories, and of systems of government had prepared him for forging at once into congressional circles.

Mr. Dingley was not an orator. He lacked the physical presence, the development of throat and chest, and quality of voice which make men orators.

In June, 1886, Mr. Dingley was rein 1861 he added a daily edition. The paper rapidly increased in circulation and influence under his management.

First Campaign for Fremont.

His first vote was cast in 1854 for Anson P. Morrill, the anti-slavery and temperance candidate for governor, a political combination from which arose the Republican party of Maine during the following winter. He threw himself into the Fremont campaign in 1866 with all the ardor of youth and ability of age. In 1861, at the age of 29, he was elected representative from Auburn to the state legislature, in which body he at once took high rank, was re-elected in 1862, and chosen speaker of the house at the session of 1863. In 1863 he removed to Lewiston, where a few months after he was elected to the legislature, and with the opening of the legislative session of 1864 was unanimously re-elected speaker. At the state election of 1864 he was elected to the house a fourth time, and with the session of 1865 was again tendered the position of speaker, which he declined, preferring to take his place on the floor. He was also a representative to the legislature from Lewiston in 1868 and 1873.

As Governor of Maine.

In 1873 Mr. Dingley was nominated as the Republican candidate for governor of Maine by a vote of 2 to 1 against two popular opponents and was elected by about 10,000 majority. In 1874 he was re-elected by over 11,000 majority, declining a third nomination in 1875. He was one of the delegates-at-large from Maine to the Republican national convention in 1876 and served on the committee on resolutions and was one of the sub-committee of five who drafted the Condensed Report of Week's Proceedings In Both Houses.

LONG HOLIDAY RECESS TAKEN.

Very Little Business Has So Far Been Transacted in Either Branch of the Legislature—Committees Are Not Yet Fully Made Up.

Friday, Jan. 13.

Speaker Sherman gave out a list of all the chairmanships of house committees as follows: Contingent expenses, Meaney of Chicago; live stock and dairying, Thiemann of Cook; military affairs, Rankin of Warren; education, Trowbridge of LaSalle; fees and salaries, Newcomer of Cook; Soldiers' Home, Schlagenhauf of Adams; state and municipal civil service reform, Young of Cook; manufactures, Johnson of Rock Island; warehouses, Cherry of Kendall; congressional apportionment, Scroggin of McLean, banks and banking, Lyon of Lake; appropriations, Curtis of Kankakee; railroads, Cavanaugh of Cook; judiciary, Allen of Vermillion; labor, Drew of Will; mines and mining, Searcey of Palmyra; corporations, Brown of Perry or Fuller of Lake.

Both houses lacked a quorum this morning and adjourned to Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Tuesday, Jan. 17.

The house met at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, but transacted no business. Speaker Sherman was busy making up his committees, and the session was presided over by Mr. Trowbridge of La Salle. The journal was read and approved, when a motion was made by Mr. Scroggin to adjourn. The motion prevailed.

In the senate Senator Fred A. Busse introduced a bill which provides for the incorporation of "pawners' societies." It was referred to the committee on municipalities.

The Corona.

The most striking feature of a total eclipse of the sun is the corona, a halo of light which is seen just as the sun's disk is completely obscured by the moon. The spectrum of this light was shown in 1869 to contain as its most prominent feature a green line, which had not been found in the spectrum of any known element, and which was, therefore, assigned to an unknown element, "coronium." Helium, observed in the sun the year before, was found on the earth in 1895, and now this other solar element has just been discovered in one of the gases which stream forth from the ground in certain parts of Italy. Professor Nasini, of the University of Padua has for some time been engaged in the study of these gases in search of argon or helium. In the spectrum of the gas from the Solfatara di Pozzuoli, he found not only the argon lines, but also the characteristic line of coronium. What makes this discovery of especial interest is the fact that coronium is probably by far the lightest of the elements, for it occurs in the corona, at least five hundred thousand miles distant from the sun's surface.

An Extraordinary Accident.

An extraordinary accident occurred recently on the North "Iron" road, Dublin, to a lady cyclist. She was passing along a portion of the road where arrangements for the electric tramway system are being completed. The wire was allowed to lie slack upon the roadway. Suddenly as she was crossing the wire it was drawn taut, with the result that the lady and her bicycle were flung high into the air. Both turned completely over, but fortunately the lady landed on her feet, suffering a violent shock from which she is at present prostrate. The machine, which was raised a considerable height, was completely smashed.

Heiress in Charge of Police.

The marriage of Charles Gagne of 123 Harrison street two months ago to 17-year-old Rose Wallace of Evansville, Ind., an heiress to $60,000, became a subject of police inquiry last night, when Mrs. Gagne's 14-year-old sister, Gertie, was found wandering at Clark and Harrison streets by an officer and taken to the armory station. Inspector Hartnett and Capt. Mahoney questioned her, and her story caused them to begin a search for Mrs. Gagne. According to Gertie, she and her sister will come into a fortune of $120,000 when they are of age. She said Rose came here seeking employment, and soon married Gagne, whom she had not known previously. Gagne was sent for and he expressed indignation because his sister-in-law was under surveillance. He declared he and his wife had expected the girl to arrive on an 8 o'clock train and because she came in on a 5 o'clock no one had been at the depot to meet her. He demanded that the girl be allowed to accompany him home.

Mills Will Make Tinplate.

Peoria, Ill.—The Peoria rolling mills are preparing to enter upon the manufacture of tinplate. The plan was under consideration long before the new tinplate trust was organized, but the success of that combination and the higher prices it has put in effect have made it sure that they will be carried out as soon as possible. Joseph B. Greenhut, the former president of the whiskey trust and originator of the glucose trust, is the president and principal stockholder of the rolling mills company, and with experience in trust methods will be able to make things lively for the tinplate combination. The mill is equipped to make the black plate, and will only need to add a tin dipping plant.

Block Celebrates Victory.

Peoria special: Henry Block, the Hebrew who conquered death yesterday and overthrew the false prophet Goodman, who is said to have predicted he would die Jan. 15, was celebrating today. During the last week he has been taking exceedingly good care of himself, sleeping between feather mattresses to ward off the grip, and being vigorous in his diet. Last night he broke training by devouring a huge Irish stew as soon as the sun had set and today he satisfied another craving by eating half a hot mince pie. He is too much occupied with catching up with the good things he has been missing and too happy over being relieved from the strain under which he has been laboring to cherish much malice against Goodman.

Joliet Fights the Railroads.

Joliet, Ill.—The Joliet city council on January 16th took another step in its campaign against the railroad companies for failure to come to terms over the track elevation ordinance. An order was passed directing the Economy Light and Power Company to remove the street lights which the city has maintained at fourteen of the principal railroad crossings in this city. This is to be followed by an ordinance requiring the railroads to maintain, at their own expense, lights at all the railroad crossings. Litigation is expected to follow as a result of tonight's ordinance, as the crossings will be left in total darkness.

Mrs. King of Peoria Is Dead.

Peoria, Ill.—Mrs. Sue Clegg King died Jan. 16 of paralysis of the spine. She was prominent in charitable work, being secretary of the Guyer Home for Aged People. She leaves a son, J. A. Clegg of Bloomington, and two daughters, Mrs. W. H. Miller and Mrs. E. H. Walker of this city. A peculiar coincidence is that the funeral of Mrs. Isaac Walker of Chicago, the mother of Mr. E. H. Walker, is to be held here tomorrow.

Trials of an Ottawa Paper.

Ottawa, Ill.—Another change in the affairs of the Fair Dealer, the free-silver paper, was made this morning. The holder of the mortgage on the plant took charge of the paper, and it is now in the hands of a custodian. The paper will be sold under the mortgage. Its former proprietor made a trip to Chicago last week to secure aid from "Coin" Harvey, but was unsuccessful.

Decatur Factory Is Burned.

Decatur, Ill.—The main and smaller buildings of the Chambers, Bering & Quinlan agricultural implement works were destroyed by fire at midnight Jan. 17, throwing 100 men out of work. The fire started in the blacking room. The loss is $40,000; insurance, $20,000. The company has houses in Kansas City, Omaha and St. Joseph, and was rushed with orders for corn planters.

KILLED BY A HORSE.

Michael Howley Meets With Sudden Death While Riding a Horse at Palatine.

While riding a horse for K. Patterson on the Wilson race track yesterday morning about 10 o'clock, Michael Howley was thrown from the animal, his foot being caught in the stirrup, he was dragged several rods. It is supposed he was kicked by the horse, as he sustained a severe fracture of the skull. Dr. Schierding was called, but the boy was so badly injured that he was unable to give him much aid, and only lived a few minutes after the doctor's arrival.

Mr. Howley was about 14 years of age and came from Chicago two weeks ago to work for Mr. Patterson.

Mistakes, it is feared, may happen through such practices and the order consequently has been issued.

The Oliver Typewriter

It has taken 25 years to find out that typewriters have been built up-side down. The OLIVER is built right-side up, where the WORK IS IN SIGHT.

The OLIVER is popular because it is an up-to-date typewriter; not in the trust, and because it SHOWS EVERY WORD AS YOU WRITE IT.
