Mr. Boyle shipped a carload of his track horses to Wisconsin the first of the week, where they will take in some of the big races.

Mr. Plummer, of Evanston, is acting as telegraph operator at this station. Will Brockway will spend his two-weeks' vacation in Wisconsin and in the west.

J. Abbott and family, of Irving Park, wheeled out to Palatine to visit H. Pihlman and family over Sunday. Mrs. Taylor, of Irving Park, was also a visitor.

The entertainment of moving pictures which was scheduled to occur last Saturday night failed to materialize. Perhaps that botch job of printing scared the company away.

Henry Pahlman is attending Kimball's school of stenography in Chicago, and Raymond Butler and Herman Wildhagen are attending the Metropolitan Business college.

Dan Sturm, of Quentin's Corners, had his team of horses stolen by horse thieves last Thursday night. The team was standing in front of Mr. Dymond's place at Lake Zurich.

The firms of Batterman, Abelmann & Ost and W. R. Comfort & Co. decided to consolidate last week, but when they commenced to invoice stock it was found that an agreement could not be reached so the two firms will run separately as heretofore.

Charles Seip has entered his horse in the 2:50 pacing race at Woodstock to be held on Friday. The races commence Thursday and close Saturday. Excursion rates have been made by the railroads.

A large crowd of young people from Chicago enjoyed the Fourth at Boyle's stock farm. They came to town on a hay rack and let people know they were enjoying themselves by singing as they went.

The Register claims to be the only local paper that dares tell the truth. We will concede that the Register dares tell the untruth when it claims to have double the circulation of any local paper. Quit bluffing and prove it.

From all that I can learn concerning the man who promised to give an entertainment here on Saturday, July 1 there is no probability that he will ever make his appearance again. Everybody holding tickets for the above-named entertainment can redeem same after next Sunday by handing their tickets to the child from whom they bought them. Every child, who sold tickets, should come to Sunday school next Sunday to bring unsold tickets and get the money for tickets sold. J. C. HOFFMEISTER.

Matthei & Wildhagen have succeeded H. C. Matthei in the general store business, Mr. Matthei retiring after having been in business here for more than thirty years. P. H. Matthei, of the new firm, is a son of the former proprietor and was born and brought up in our village. Henry Wildhagen is also a Palatine young man who has had several years' experience in the dry goods and grocery business. Both are well known and respected for their integrity and honesty. The new firm took charge of the business Wednesday morning and have good prospects for a successful business career. THE REVIEW wishes them a fair share of the patronage of the public. H. C. Matthei, although retaining an interest in the firm, will retire from active work and enjoy the fruits of his years of labor.

Hammer Club's Annual Outing.

The Hammer Club of Chicago was entertained at the summer home of Miss Alice Boyle, one of the club's leading members, on July 3 and 4. The club was the recipient of a hospitality which, the members say, will never be forgotten. It was unanimously voted that the two days' outing was fully equal to any forty-eight hours spent at the club's annual outing at South Haven, Mich.

The weather tried hard to interfere with many of the plans laid out for the club but was, as a whole, disappointed in its efforts. Hayrack rides, and many other forms of rural pastimes were indulged in accompanied by a sufficiency of umbrellas.

The following are the members of the club who availed themselves of Miss Boyle's hospitality: Misses Maude Street, Florence Glassbrook, Nan Glassbrook, Anna McGivern, Kattie Kimmit, Nellie Kimmit, Irene Boyle and Marie Bulman; Messrs. William McGivern, Charles Ahern, Bartley McGivern, Richard Finn, George Purdon, Herbert T. Snell and Charles Carroll.

Celebration a Success.

The rain on Tuesday failed to stop Palatine celebration. Enough noise was made throughout the day to satisfy the most fastidious. The fun commenced early and when it rained the firing of crackers, guns, etc., continued the same as before under shelter along the street. In the afternoon the Palatine band played a number of popular selections and then proceeded to the picnic grounds, where crowds had already commenced to assemble. The rag muffins were not numerous, but the few that turned out were good. The one representing the fire company received first prize. The cannon was brought out in the afternoon and belched forth in thundering tones and people realized that Independence day was here. The picnic grounds was the scene of the largest crowd that has assembled there in several years and the fire laddies had their hands full to wait on the people, but they succeeded in doing so much to the satisfaction of everybody and all had a good time. The Mannerchor sang several choice selections in their usual pleasing manner and altogether it was a good celebration. The fireworks were fine and received proper handling by the committee in charge. The fire company has placed a few dollars in their treasury as a result of the occasion.

Palatine Board Proceedings.

The village board met in regular session last Monday evening.

The matter of grading Wilson street in the west part of town provoked considerable discussion, and the matter was finally left to the sidewalk committee for adjustment.

Moved by Taylor, seconded by Putnam that the committee on water works be empowered to have an eight-inch hole sunk in present well which supplies the water works system, same not to exceed a cost of $400; carried.

It appears that the supply of water is low at times and if a fire should break out while such is the case, serious results might follow.

The water works committee was instructed to provide a schedule of prices, whereby any residence in the village can be supplied with city water at a reasonable rate for piping. It is expected that there will be quite a number of new consumers in the near future.

The petition signed by a number of citizens requesting the opening of Wilson street across the railroad tracks was referred to the judiciary committee. This matter was discussed some time ago and a committee consulted the village attorney, who stated that to open the street meant an expenditure of at least $2,000 and possibly the case would go against them then.

The petition of R. Downing asking for permission to make an addition to the cemetery was referred to a committee of three composed of Trustees Taylor, Putnam and Ost.

The committee on water works was instructed to investigate and obtain information as to the cost and feasibility of putting in a system of fire alarm.

The following bills were presented and warrants were issued for same:

H. Allard $6.60, H. Schopp $28.20, W. Linnemann $1.80, W. Langhorst, 60c, H. Otner $7.50, C. Kublank $1.50, W. Textmeyer $2.10, F. Wildhagen $24.60, H. Zinkel $35.25, W. Huneberg $35.40, D. They are suffering from disease and are entirely discouraged. The power of Aguinaldo will be broken immediately on the arrival of American troops to garrison towns that are taken.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Farming Without Stock Exhaustive.
A. C. True, director of the Minnesota Experiment Station, says:

When the lands are grazed by sheep and cattle the soil fertility is drawn upon to the extent of the nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash required to build the blood, bone, and tissue of the animal body. This is considerable in the case of growing animals, but insignificant in case of animals which have made their growth (especially of bone) and are simply maintained or fattened on the pasture. If, however, concentrated feeds are used in addition to pasture, and the manure produced returned to the land, there is an actual gain in fertility of the land. It will thus be seen that exclusive grain farming or continuous culture of a single crop has a much greater tendency to impoverish the soil than stock raising or combined grain and stock raising. A comparison of the amount of plant food removed from the soil and the amount capable of being returned to it under different systems of husbandry has been made by the Minnesota Experiment Station. The systems taken into consideration were all-grain farming, mixed grain and general farming, mixed potato and general farming, stock farming, and dairy farming, examples being selected which represented the different systems. In each case the farm is considered to contain 160 acres.

In the example of all-grain farming selected no stock was kept and no fertilizers of any kind applied to the land, the small amount of fertilizing material which necessarily accumulated was disregarded, and the grain was all sold from the farm. The entire farm of 100 acres was under cultivation. The crops raised were 100 acres of wheat, 40 acres of barley, and 20 acres of oats, yielding 15, 40 and 50 bushels per acre, respectively. It is calculated that the fertility removed from such a farm in the grain and straw of one year's crops amounted to 2,460 pounds phosphoric acid, 4,020 pounds potash, and 5,600 pounds nitrogen. This does not include the fertility removed by the weeds, which often is very large, and the amount of nitrogen lost from the soil through leaching and the decomposition of humus.

In the example of stock farming selected for study, 25 acres were sown to oats, 20 to barley, 10 to corn, 5 to peas, and 1 acre each to potatoes and millet. The remainder of the farm was in meadow and pasture. The stock kept in this case comprised 10 beef cattle, and 10 dairy cows, 10 horses, 5 steers, 10 head of young stock, 30 sheep, and 20 hogs. Five steers of 1,000 pounds each, 5 head of young stock, 5 horses, 10 hogs of 250 pounds each, and 1,500 pounds of butter were sold from the farm. All the crops grown, including 40 tons of timothy and 30 tons of clover, were consumed on the farm. Eighteen tons of food material and 5 cords of wood were purchased and consumed, besides the crops produced. Under these conditions there was approximately a gain of 35 pounds of phosphoric acid, and a loss of 50 pounds of potash, and 893 pounds of nitrogen. The loss of nitrogen was more than balanced by the gain due to the clover crop, so that on the whole there was practically no loss of fertility from the farm.

In the example given of a dairy farm, 30 cows, 5 head of young stock, 4 horses, and 20 pigs constituted the stock kept on the farm. The crops raised were 10 acres of wheat, 20 of oats, 10 of corn, 7 of rye, 5 of oats for hay, 2 acres each of roots and peas, 1 each of millet and potatoes; 25 tons of both clover and timothy were produced, and the remainder of the farm was mainly in pasture. Sixteen pigs of 250 pounds each and 4 head of young stock, 5,000 pounds of butter, and all the wheat and rye produced were sold from the farm, while the rest of the products were consumed as feed and 80 per cent returned to the soil as fertilizer. Ten tons of feed and 5 cords of wood were purchased and consumed in addition to what was produced on the farm. The figures given for dairy farming show a gain of 76 pounds of phosphoric acid and a loss of 85 pounds potash, and 869 pounds nitrogen. The loss of nitrogen, however, is again more than offset by the gain through the clover crop, so that there is practically no loss of fertility in dairy farming under proper management, but rather a constant gain.

Draining Barnyards.

There is a commonly received opinion that tile drains do not work well in barnyards, for the reason that the tramping of the surface will puddle the earth to the extent that the water will not get down into the drains, says Drainage Journal. To some extent this is true, but tile drains will drain the underlying earth and prevent the mud in the barnyard from getting so deep. We have found that three or four drains well located in the barn lot, the number depending on the size of the lot, will serve a good purpose in keeping the foundation firm. I then gravel the surface where I expect the stock to tramp most. By so doing the surface soon gets firm and free from sloppy mud, and we have no deep mud. It is all a mistake to think that tilling will do no good. The water from the eaves may be caught in gutters and conducted down to a tile drain and carried away, without affecting in any way the barn-lot. It requires a little good common sense in ditching and graveling to have a dry barn-lot. But there are some who would not feel at home unless they could approach their barn and stable by stepping from one piece of a rail or board to another, getting to the door with a hop, skip and a jump. It would be so unnatural otherwise. There are people, however, who prefer dry land, and we write for their benefit. As for the other fellows they can roll up their trousers and wade through.

Most of the complaint about manure being washed away is due to leaving it under the eaves of the barn for the water to fall upon it and wash it away. Better have the water carried away with gutters entering into down pipes connected with tile drains. By so doing you may have a dry barn lot.

Canker Worm and Curl Leaf.

The Michigan State Board of Agriculture has been sending out inquiries to ascertain the prevalence of canker worms and leaf curl in that state. In reply to the question, "Are there any apple orchards infested with canker worms?" 181 correspondents in the southern counties answer "yes" and 146 "no"; in the central counties 57 answer "yes" and 54 "no"; in the northern counties 31 answer "yes" and 31 "no," and for the state 269 "yes" and 231 "no." These replies indicate that this pest is gaining a foothold in the state, and that, if not properly controlled, will eventually ruin the apple orchards in Michigan.

In reply to the question, "Is curl leaf prevalent this season?" 50 correspondents in the southern counties answer "yes" and 271 "no"; in the central counties 19 answer "yes" and 79 "no"; in the northern counties 6 answer "yes" and 38 "no," and for the state 75 answer "yes" and 388 "no." Many varieties of peaches last year were seriously injured by curl leaf. The conditions were not so favorable for this disease this year. It has not been noticed so much either on account of the trees being killed and injured. It is hoped, though, that enough spraying has been done to demonstrate whether or no this disease can be controlled by spraying.

The Soil Problem in Nebraska.

The annual report of the Nebraska Experiment Station says: Without doubt the greatest problem in Nebraska agriculture is to determine the proper methods of soil tillage. The conditions affecting plant growth in the Trans-Missouri region are totally different from any heretofore encountered by the agriculturist in any portion of this country. With an annual rainfall of 23 inches and a loss by evaporation from a plane water surface of 50 inches in the course of a year, it is not difficult to see that the end and aim of soil tillage in this region must be to conserve, in so far as possible, moisture in the soil. Not only are the climatic conditions very different from those found elsewhere, but the soil of this state is generally quite different in its physical structure, from that covering other portions of the country east of the Missouri river. The result is that the Nebraska farmer must work out an entirely new practice in the treatment of his soil.

Bogus Seed Collections.—The World Seed Co., of Boston, Mass., has made a target of itself for the division of seed investigation of the agriculture department. This company has been endeavoring to defraud farmers by sending out packages bearing the captivating legend "Beauties Flower Garden," etc., and purporting to contain a mixture of three hundred varieties of choice flower seeds which would produce a perpetual blooming flower garden. All this was offered for five cents. In addition to this farmers were solicited to sell packages of these seeds on commission and under various arrangements. The seed division made an examination of the seeds contained in a package and found them composed of about 75 per cent of red top, timothy and chaff, about 20 per cent of such common seeds as sunflower, sweet peas, morning glory, etc., and five per cent of other varieties. The various departments of the government are on the watch for these fellows who try to stick people for even small amounts.

Farming in the South.—The Southern farming system is unlike that of the North. It is more feudal, says Octave Thanet. Whether this makes for good or evil I leave to the economists, only hazarding the remark that the landlord system, where the landlord is a resident on his estate, has one advantage worth keeping; the personal relation between owner and tenants is so close that it is likely to be kindly; and a spirit of friendly responsibility on the one hand and friendly dependence on the other, is a common fact on plantations.

LIKE ALL GREAT MEN

PHILANTHROPIST FINDS HIMSELF IN NEED OF MONEY.

Gave Away a Million Dollars, All He Had, for the Benefit of His Fellow Men and Is Now in Abjee Want—His Home Sold for $67,000.

Oakwood, the beautiful Probasco home in Clifton, near Cincinnati, on which over $500,000 was expended, was recently knocked down at auction to Louis B. Reakirt for $67,000, and thus passes from his possession the last asset of Henry Probasco, art connoisseur, bibliophile and philanthropist, who retired from business over a quarter of a century ago, worth easily $1,000,000.

HENRY PROBASCO.

He gave Cincinnati the beautiful Tyler-Davidson fountain, an art treasure which has added to the fame of the Queen City the wide world over; he made public and private donations to every kind of cause until it is estimated that his gifts and benefactions aggregated over $700,000 and now, in his old age he finds himself a hopeless bankrupt, homeless and practically penniless in the city which he so lastingly enriched by his munificence. He is credited with having been a remarkably good business man and every transaction down to the present time exhibits the man of most careful and methodical habits, for his accounts are models of bookkeeping, accuracy and precision, but giving grew to be a passion with him, and he literally gave his all away.

CACTUS PRICKS A PROPOSAL.

Young Man Struggled Desperately Against Fate, but Had to Give Up.

From the Washington Post: The man in the case has been studying law here, but on Saturday he went to Omaha to share the practice of a kinsman. The girl lives here, and the man thinks the climate of Nebraska would agree with her wonderfully. He has been meaning to tell her so for a long time, but he has put the matter off again and again, awaiting a favorable opportunity, till last week, the summons to Omaha coming unexpectedly, he determined to risk all at once. There was a party to Great Falls, a party so properly chaperoned that most of the day passed before he had a chance to speak to the girl alone. Then, by connivance of the chaperon, he had her off to look for wild flowers. They climbed the rocks, and there they found cactus, or, at least, something that looked exactly like cactus of the western plains. It was so curious and so enticing that the girl picked a great bunch of it. Little white hair-like objects which grew in patches on the leaves stuck to her fingers. They looked innocent enough, but when the young man undertook to squeeze her hand she discovered, and he, as well, that the tiny white hairs were so many almost invisible needles. They sat themselves down on a rock, and he went to work, gently, with his handkerchief, to rid her dainty hands of the torturing white "stickers." You can't urge the advantages of the Omaha climate on a girl who says "Ouch!" every time you take her hand, you know. The young man bided his time, and when the little hands were free of needles, he took his handkerchief and quite absently blew his nose. If you have ever blown your nose on a handkerchief loaded with cactus spines you know what happened. An overdose of snuff and an acute attack of hay fever are mere bagatelles compared with what happened to him. He was gasping and sneezing and cursing his luck when the chaperon came in search of the two of them, and he hadn't said a word about the Omaha climate. You can't say things like that between sneezes to a girl who is giggling, you know. Mournfully he left for the west on Saturday. He may be foolish and bring up the climate matter in a letter to her. He may be wise and wait to tell it to her in person when he comes to Washington again next winter. If he is foolish, she may reject him. If he wisely waits, somebody else may carry her off. Either way you look at it, it is a melancholy state of affairs, and he blames it all on the cactus.

Samoan Time-Keepers.

A very singular timekeeper is employed by some of the islanders of the South Pacific, including Samoa. The kernels of the nut of the candle tree are used. These are washed and strung on the rib of a palm leaf, which is placed in a vertical position and the upper kernel lighted.

As all the kernels are of the same size and substance, each of them burns a certain number of minutes, and then sets fire to the kernel below. The natives tie bits of bark cloth along the strings at regular intervals, so as to mark the divisions of time.

Not Very Well.

Magistrate—You are charged with stealing a dog. What have you to say? Prisoner (sullenly)—The dog followed me 'ome. Magistrate—But the constable says it did so because you had some liver about you. Prisoner (impudently)—Well, a man can't walk about without 'is liver, can 'e?

Give some men a finger in the pie and they will claim the whole bakery.

MINISTER BELLAMY STORER.

Bellamy Storer, the new minister to Spain, who was lost sight of for a week or two, is a son of the late Judge Bellamy Storer of Cincinnati, and a personal friend of President McKinley. He is a second edition of his father, and in the opinion of many who knew the elder Storer and also know the son he is even more brilliant than his sire. He came out of Harvard in 1867, and two years later was assistant United States district attorney for southern Ohio. In 1890 Mr. Storer was elected to congress and was returned for a second term. The head of the Spanish mission is admirably fitted for the delicate and important post which he will soon assume. A profoundly read jurist, he is well informed on international law. Then, too, he is an American clear through. The Storers were among the earliest settlers of the state of Maine. His mother was Elizabeth Drinker of Philadelphia, and she herself was descended directly from the pioneers of William Penn. Mr. Storer is a suave, polished, keen, far-seeing man, and can be firm as iron when occasion calls him.

BURN MINERS' SETTLEMENT.

Negroes Cause the Destruction of Union City, Ill.

DONE TO AVENGE AN ATTACK.

Strikers Fire on Colored Workers Imported to Work in the Mines at Carthage, Ill.—One Woman Killed and Twenty Men Hurt.

Union City, a settlement built by the miners' union on land adjoining the Brush mines, near Carthage, Ill., was set on fire by the non-union negroes in retaliation for the murder of Mrs. Carr, killed at Fredonia by strikers. The town will be a total loss.

A railway coach filled with negroes from Pana, Ill., and bound for the Brush mines, near Carthage, Ill., reached Fredonia, a little station eleven miles west of Marion, Ill., the morning of June 30. Here a number of strikers stopped the train and ordered Conductor William Brown to put the negroes off. He refused, and the mob then fired into the coach where the negroes were, killing one woman and injuring about twenty men. The conductor told the negroes to lie down in the car after the first volley had been fired, and no further damage was done.

About 100 yards east of Fredonia a second squad of strikers surrounded the car as the train passed, but did no damage. The negroes were finally landed at the mines.

Will Not Withdraw Warships.

There is no intention at the navy department to withdraw any of the warships now at Manila. It is asserted by naval officers that their withdrawal might lead to international trouble.

Convict Literature.

The starting of a weekly newspaper by the convicts in the Sing Sing state prison has proved to be a very suggestive and startling innovation. For years it has been a vexed question how to best employ the labor of convicts. Almost everything they did interfered with the labor of men outside the prison, and it was found that to keep them in idleness was the most demoralizing of all expedients. Then it suddenly occurred to the warden to turn their attention to journalism. So far as convicts were concerned this was an unoccupied field. The result has been most astonishing. By the merest accident the warden stumbled upon the most valuable secret of reform. The moment it was known to the convicts that they were permitted to become editors, a long felt want was appeased. They could put up with the loss of tobacco and whisky and liberty, but they had never been able to adjust themselves to the loss of that inalienable right—the freedom of the press and the privilege of expressing the thoughts that burn in the words that scorch. That warden struck a happy thought when he said to himself "Let us not despair of humanity. When a man has lost all other attributes of the immortal soul he can still edit a paper. As these poor devils cannot do anything else, they shall edit something." In that flash of inspiration he allied the convict with the great mass of humanity. It is such touches as this that make the whole world kin. It is now proved by the Sing Sing Star of Hope that "stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage," if the editorial instincts of the prisoners are not entirely suppressed. The heaven born truth now gleams upon us that it is better to make copy than to make shoes if we would preserve the natural instincts of the convict. He may no longer be able to steal babies, but he can at least exercise the universal right of stealing ideas. The privilege of cracking safes has been lost to him perhaps forever. But let him not despair. He can still crack jokes, and the once reckless assassin can now thrill the heart strings of the dilettanti by giving us some tender thoughts suggested by 24 hours in the dark cell. The only disagreeable thought connected with this new liberty is that crime may increase in the community, stimulated by the insane desire of criminals to go to Sing Sing and become editors.

Alimony has suffered a shock in New York at the hands of Justice Beach. There is in that city an alimony jail where husbands are sent who fail to pay the weekly sums to their divorced wives that the court requires. It goes without saying that a great many husbands prefer the jail to paying the money—that is, to paying it to the divorced wives—they prefer to pay it to the jailor, and he in consequence takes good care of them, so that a very jolly coterie of husbands has been found in the alimony jail. They have good dinners, wine suppers, go to all the continuous shows with a deputy sheriff, and are furnished with the best literature. But now Judge Beach has decided that if a man boards the three months at the municipal expense he has paid the penalty of alimony and is free from the debt. The divorced wives of New York are now about to hold an indignation meeting at Chickering hall and such distinguished orators as Howe and Hummel will address the meeting.

The result of allowing the freedom of the press to the prisoners at the Sing Sing state prison has been more startling than was expected. The publication there of a convict paper, called The Star of Hope, is now to be followed by a convict magazine, issuing from the Tombs, in New York, and we may speedily expect quarterly reviews from various jails. It is difficult to understand whether the furnishing of editorial facilities to prisoners is an additional punishment or a mercy, but the idea is spreading that the most effective way of reforming convicts who cannot put their cussedness into action is to let them put it into poetry and criticism.

Kipling's latest book, "From Sea to Sea," attempts to deal with the American girl, and, although the writer of this paragraph is not an American girl, it is very obvious that Mr. Kipling has had less success in this effort than he had in dealing with the English or the East Indian girl. He speaks of her marrying "the average egotistical, vain, gluttonous, but on the whole companionable sort of American person, who is to be soothed, fed and managed. This is a rather low estimate of the American girl, who has got her ideal of a husband up to a starry point where even Mr. Kipling, with all his imagination, cannot reach it.

The people of Long Island have this season restored what a great many of us think is the antique custom of praying for rain. Nor has the custom been confined to any one sect. Both Catholics and Protestants assembled and put up their petitions for a meteorological change. There is nothing like a natural calamity to do away with differences of creed. Were some great convulsion of nature to make itself felt we should have orthodox champions and the higher critics all kneeling down at the same altar.

Quick Justice.

The quick conviction of the kidnaper, George Barrow, and his tool, the nursemaid, was quite unique in court annals. Both the accused were inside the prison walls under sentence before the country was well aware that their trial had begun. This only shows how an excited condition of public sentiment stimulates justice. In the ordinary course of such affairs the cases would have dragged along until everybody got tired of hearing of them and interest had died out. Then a plea of insanity would have been made without attracting much attention, and the accused would have got off with a light sentence or got off without any. The fact is that preparations were making to advance this very plea, and the father of Barrow, who lives in Texas, was accumulating facts to prove the dementia of his son. But justice was too swift. It will not do to argue that such swiftness, especially when it is stimulated by public sentiment, is to be commended on any just grounds. It is the boast of our courts that they are independent of public sentiment. But the question that naturally arises here is this, if justice were uniformly meted out by the courts in this summary manner, would not the lamentable tendency of the people to take the law into their own hands be lessened?

Most of the telegraphic bulletins that are sent from London about Mrs. Bradley Martin relate entirely to her jewels. It seems that she wore her string of diamonds at the Ascot and appeared at the opera with her enormous emerald. Her glittering mission appears to be to vary her coruscating exterior according to the resources of her casket. So marked has this manner of chronicling the Martin's movements become that it has raised a slight complaint, for even the Martin desires to be heralded occasionally independently of her babbling. An investigation has shown that this peculiarity of the bulletins is mainly owing to the intrusion of the female chronicler into journalism. She it is who tags after the recorder of events, to tabulate the dresses and the gems, and whose glittering reports take precedence of all others in Vanity Fair. A double shotted cablegram has been given to the western world to the effect that on a certain occasion in London the Bradley Martin wore her huge turquoise. This detail, once on its way, grew to be the real event itself, and the Bradley Martin utterly disappeared in the resplendence of her traveling turquoise. When the news got as far as the Mississippi, it were only one significance in heavy black letters, "She wore her turquoise." Mr. Edmund Gosse, who inclines rather to gems of thought than to court jewels, calls this the bric-a-brac side of journalism, and declares that he is becoming somewhat nauseated by the over dose of femininity. The complaint is not without some justification. We know of Mrs. Brown Potter only by her change of garments, and Shakespeare himself now reaches us only through Worth's establishment. If you wish to know what Mrs. Arthur Paget is up to, you will have to ask the costumer. The social, religious and even the political changes are changes of dress. To such an extent has this been carried by the society reporters that one is entitled to hope that the end is near.

The governor of Kansas some time ago made up his mind that a committee of women would be able to find out a great deal more about the condition of the state institutions than men. He accordingly appointed such a committee of three reputable ladies and instructed them to visit all the state institutions, examine them carefully and report to him their conditions and needs. The result of this experiment has been very satisfactory. It is now generally conceded that the women saw a great deal that the men had never noticed, and, what is more, they gave a quick intuitive judgment as to the means of remedying the defects. The governor is so pleased with the outcome of his experiment that he will doubtless call in the services of women for other state work.

Another beautiful concert hall singer of Paris, La Cavalleri, has captured a prince. It seems that she had several specimens of royal blood in her train, and after considerable skirmishing she found out which one had the most ready money, and dropped gracefully into his arms. A paragraph in the Independence Belge recounts that at a recent gathering of European aristocrats, in The Hague one of the dowagers wanted to know where all the absent blooded princes were, and she was informed by one of the veteran Talleyrands who hang round on such occasions, that they were all at the stage door of the Folies Bergeres in Paris trying to marry a new ballet dancer.

A Kansas paper counters very neatly on the effete east by calling attention to the barbarism of New York in imprisoning men for debt, a practice which has been abolished by every other state in the Union. The same paper alludes incidentally to Delaware, which is as far east as the constitution will allow a state to get, which state retains the whipping post, quite regardless of the advance of civilization in Oklahoma and Oregon.

Governor Sayers of Texas speaks encouragingly of the projected antitrust conference which is to take place in St. Louis in September. Seventeen governors have responded favorably to the call, and 13 of them have declared in the most outspoken manner in favor of a national antitrust movement. Whatever may be one's views with respect to the advisability of this conference and arguments for and against the trusts darken the air, it is useless to deny that the subject itself is daily gaining momentum and threatens to become a live issue in the immediate future of politics. But it is, after all, so essentially an economic question that one would like to see it fairly discussed by a convention of the wisest economists of the nation without respect to the advantages of party or the prejudices and purposes of politicians. The people of the country have to do with a very serious fact in the enormous growth of the trusts. That is a truth that cannot be dodged. But they should have to do with it patriotically and reasonably. The startling declaration of Mr. M. L. Lockwood before the industrial commission at Washington will not down by any palliating arguments. What the people of the United States desire to know and have a right to know is whether those damaging statements made against the Standard Oil trust are true or not. What all of us would like to know clearly is just what the status of the trusts is in relation to the future well being of the country and in just how far those trusts are the legitimate outcome of enterprise or a menace to our liberties. If Governor Sayers' antitrust convention will come at this problem like patriots and statesmen, the whole country will be thankful.

The passing of Oakdale, O. T., is a distinctly western piece of business that would bloom into a romance in any other country. Oakdale was a little rival of Mountain View. The citizens of the two sites boomed and antagonized and quarreled, and then Mountain View determined to gobble Oakdale bodily. So the first citizens of Mountain View offered to buy it. A cash price was fixed upon, and they purchased the town out and out. It was then put upon rollers and hoisted into Mountain View, and the place that knew Oakdale knows it no more. A few tomato cans and broken bottles mark the once enterprising site. Had this occurred in Austria, Heine would have written a poem about it, and Mr. Howells would have translated it, and then perhaps Mr. Riddle would have recited it.

There is considerable mystery about the recent earthquake that was felt in five or six western states and which was coincident with the cold snap. In parts of Indiana and Illinois it caused vast fissures in the earth, which has given rise to the theory that the shock was the result of the contraction of the earth caused by the cold.

WHAT TO READ.

Some Prominent Chicagoans Express Opinions.

In these enlightened times every person who pretends to keep in touch with the progress of the world must read a first-class daily metropolitan newspaper. They who would select the best should be guided by the opinions of prominent newspaper-men who know. Read the following:

"There is no question as to the position occupied by The Chicago Tribune. Its enterprise has been too often demonstrated. As a local and American news-gathering institution it has no superior and few equals. In the matter of foreign cables, no other paper west of New York can be compared to it. These are the things, of course, that go to make a complete and great newspaper." CARTER H. HARRISON, Mayor of Chicago, formerly publisher Chicago Times.

BARRINGTON REVIEW.

VOL. 14 No. 18.

BARRINGTON, ILL., SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1899.

1.25 A YEAR

Two Austrian Pops.

The two greatest dandies at the Empress Maria Theresa's court were Count Crobor and Marquis Taronca. These two men made a wager as to who should appear in the most costly costume at the next court ball, jewels to be debarred. The Marquis Taronca appeared in most gorgeous apparel and was considered by every one to have triumphed over his rival, who was attired in a plain satin suit. While the jury were deciding Count Crobor threw open his plain satin cloak, and, placing it on the ground, showed that it was lined with one of Correggio's most famous works. The count won the wager—1,000 ducats—but the Correggio had cost 100,000 ducats.

The same count once paid a visit to Paris with a large party of friends and entertained them at a "dinner" which lasted three days and nights. It is interesting to note that this extravagant nobleman died in penury some 30 years later. Having exhausted his means, he was pensioned by the Emperor Francis, but in 1765, when Francis died, his pension was reduced to about $80 a year. One morning in mid-winter the frozen corpse of the count was discovered on a heap of refuse on the shores of the Danube.

The Enormity Melted.

There was especial opposition to the disturbance of the old Granary burial ground adjoining the Common in Boston, through a portion of which the subway runs. It was necessary to remove the remains of 910 persons interred there. One elderly man of Scotch descent made a great fuss over what he termed "the enormity of molesting the bones of his ancestors."

After much argument, delay and persuasion the venerable Scot was induced to agree that if the city would construct a tomb according to his ideas he would consent to the removal without causing further trouble. On the day the vault was completed the guardian of his progenitors was taken over to inspect this new repository.

"Now," said Dr. Green, a former mayor, who had charge of the work of removing the bodies, "you can set a day and the remains can be brought over and deposited here."

"What!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "Have that nice new tomb littered up with those old bones? Never! Close up the old tomb and let 'em be!"

Thus did he secure, without cost, a new family tomb.—New York Tribune.

A Pet Whale.

On a small island in the middle of the South Pacific lives a planter, the only white man on the island—which is full of brown skinned folk—who cuts and dries the meat of the cocanut, which he sells to trading vessels.

When any stranger stops at his island he will give him of the best that the island affords; he will get up great concerts and dances of the islanders; above all, he will take him out to see his pet, which is perhaps the largest and oddest animal that was ever petted by any man.

This pet is a sperm whale, nearly 70 feet long. He came through the narrow entrance into the little harbor, which is walled in by a coral reef, when quite small, and remained until he had grown so large that he could not get out if he wanted to.

The great creature comes up to be fed when the planter blows a horn, and after his meal of a barrel of chopped meat or fish performs some ponderous and amusing tricks, apparently knowing what is expected of him.—Stray Stories.

His Double Demise.

"Wull, wull!" ejaculated McLubberty, in the midst of his perusal of a newspaper which he had carelessly picked up. "Bedad, poor Duffy is dead again! An ut sames to haff happened in the same way as ut did prayvously—he has been blown up by a premtator blast. Oi shud hōv t'ought that wance wuu, hōv been enough to satisfy him, but thin he always was wan av thin fealers that niver know their own minds."

"Phwat are yez tarkin about?" asked Mrs. McLubberty in some surprise. "Duffy dead again? Is ut crazy ye are?"

"No; Oi do be r'ading ut roight here in the papy, an'—"

"Lave me look at thot dockymint! Whoy, yez blunderhead, dhis is a 2-year-olwd papy thot Oi laid out to spread on the shiff!"

"Is thot so? Wull, ut relaves me mind. Oi was sorry to t'ink av such bad luck happenin to poor Duffy."—Harper's Bazar.

Honors Easy.

"Who carried off the honors at the walk, Rastus?"

"Mr. Sam Johnsing, sah, but de Lawd only knows who carried off de cake."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Very Prudent Young Man.

Of William and John Scott, afterward Lord Stowell and Lord Elton, Lord John Russell used to tell this story: When they were young men at the bar, having had a stroke of professional luck, they determined to celebrate the occasion by having a dinner at the tavern and going to the play. When it was time to call for the reckoning William Scott dropped a guinea. He and his brother searched for it in vain and came to the conclusion that it had fallen between the boards of the uncarpeted floor.

"This is a bad job," said William, "we must give up the play."

"Stop a bit," said John. "I know a trick worth two of that," and he called a waitress.

"Betty," said he, "we've dropped 2 guineas. See if you can find them." Betty went down on her hands and knees and found the guinea, which had rolled under the fender.

"That's a very good girl, Betty," said John Scott, pocketing the coin, "and when you find the other you can keep it for your trouble." And the prudent brothers went with light hearts to the play and so eventually to the bench and the woolsack.

Fish in Icebound Waters.

Fish do not breathe air, but the life supporting constituent of air—oxygen gas—which is soluble in water, to the extent of three volumes in 100 at ordinary temperatures and four in 100 at freezing point.

The water containing the dissolved oxygen is made to pass over the gills, where it is separated from the blood only by a very thin membrane, through which the gas is able to pass.

Fish in icebound rivers have to depend entirely upon this store of oxygen for their respiration, and if it becomes exhausted they are suffocated, just as we should be if deprived of oxygen.

It rarely happens, however, that any considerable area of water is entirely covered with ice, especially in the case of rivers. Holes and cracks are almost sure to occur here and there, by which the oxygen of the air can reach the water and become dissolved in it. During a long frost fish may always be found congregated beneath air holes in large numbers. They are there to breathe.—Exchange.

Early Use of Tobacco.

I have heard my grandfather say that one pipe was handed from man to man round about the table. They had first silver pipes; the ordinary sort made use of a walnut shell and a straw. Tobacco was sold then for its weight in silver. I have heard some of our old yeomen neighbors say that when they went to Malmesbury or Chippenham market they culled out their biggest shillings to lay in the scales against the tobacco. Sir W. R., standing in a stand at Sir Robert Poyntz's park at Acton, took a pipe of tobacco, which made the ladies quit it until he had done.—Brief Lines Set Down by John Aubrey, 1669-96.

The Philosophical Tailor.

How often have I taken away a garment for a fault which did not exist and which I of course never intended to rectify. How often have I taken back the same garment without it ever having been unfolded and been commended for the alteration which had not been made, and then been reprehended for not having done what was right at first. A man to be a good tailor should be either a philosopher or a mean, cringing slave, whose feelings had never been excited to the pitch of manhood.—"Life of Francis Place."

Literary Pursuit.

Fynshly—What is Wally doing now? Harrison—Well, when I last saw him he was engaged in a literary pursuit.

Fynshly—Indeed! I didn't think he had enough brain to write.

Harrison—He wasn't writing. He was chasing a newspaper that the wind had blown away.—London Fun

Prayer From a Grateful Heart.

Prayer as the expression of a sincere and grateful heart may have its uses, and doubtless has. But in the mouth of a man who loans money at 200-per cent interest on chattel mortgage it may as well be omitted.—Columbus Press-Post.

"There is an old woman," says a London paper, "who has a milk stand in St. James park, who has stood at it for 63 years. Her mother kept it before her and her grandmother before that, the latter having been in possession for 72 years."

The officers of a leading London hospital believe that the general increase of cancer is due to excess in meat eating.

Some royal crowns are merely silk wadded caps ornamented with jewels and pendants.

The Round Robin.

The "round robin" had its origin several centuries ago in France.

It was used there by officers of the army as a method of expressing their dissatisfaction with the course of the king or his ministers. By signing in a circular form the leaders of the movement could not be ascertained and singled out for punishment.

The first instance on record of the use of this form of protest in the navy occurred in 1625. At the instigation of the Duke of Buckingham, the king's favorite, an English fleet, under Admiral Bennington, was dispatched to Rochelle to assist in the coercion of the Protestant subjects of Louis XIII of France. But the English tars, in common with their fellow countrymen, looked with favor upon the resistance of their coreligionists against the proselyting zeal of the French king, and they signed a "round robin," expressing their determination not to fire a shot against them, and without waiting for a reply they weighed anchor and brought their ships back to England. The admiral, however, received a peremptory order to return to Dieppe, whereupon the whole of the crews quitted the ships without further parley.—Providence Journal.

A Disappearing Bullseye.

The Chinese peasant wears a turban, loose coat and short and very baggy trousers, all of blue. The Chinese soldier wears the same, with an overall sleeveless smock, or long waistcoat buttoned on the right shoulder, edged round the neck, arms and skirt and down the front with broad "facings." The breast and back are decorated with a one foot bullseye with characters on it. This is all the character the Chinese soldier possesses.

The bullseye would be a very convenient mark for an enemy if the Chinese soldier would give the latter a chance of shooting him, but the bullseye is only worn to raise false hopes, for no sooner does he arrive dangerously near the enemy than he doffs the garb of war to appear as an innocent civilian. He is usually armed with a muzzle loader or standard, both equally harmless weapons.

In the case of General Liu's escort the uniform smocks had evidently not been used as nightshirts for more than a few weeks, the men were armed with Winchesters and a few Martinis, rusty, dirty and out of order, and wore about their middles a belt of some 60 rounds of solid drawn brass cartridges.—London News.

The Atmospheric Clock.

The atmospheric clock—a sort of device that goes of itself—is not inaptly termed a perpetual hourglass. In appearance it is like a long thermometer with the bulb of mercury at the bottom. The glass tube is about three-eighths of an inch in diameter and secured to the frame by two bands through which it passes easily. The divisions of time are marked on each side of the tube. Inside the glass tube is a smaller tube shaped very much as an hourglass. Some mercury and a scrap of blotting paper for the purpose of taking up any moisture that might gather in the tube are placed at each end.

The mercury in the top end of the tube is placed opposite the mark of the proper time and falls to the bottom of the tube exactly as the time passes. When it has run out from the top, the frame can be turned and the mercury set to time on the other side. Thus it registers the seconds and hours quite as accurately as any other timepiece—the drawback to such an arrangement being, of course, the turning of the frame, a task as irksome as that of winding a clock.—Exchange.

Siamese Superstitions.

The first thing an orthodox Siamese does in the morning is to scare away the family ghosts who may have gathered about the old place in the night. Letting off crackers is an effectual means. At the new year all the ghosts come trooping to their former dwellings. For three days they have their fun. At the end of the time the priests and their flocks fire guns and use other devices for getting rid of them. A Siamese is cuffed face downward, so that the ghost may not sneak back through the dead man's mouth. The coffin is taken out through a hole in the wall and carried several times round the house in order that the ghost may be put off the scent and not return to vex his family.—Exchange.

An American lady, so an English tourist reports, being asked what she was fixed her status by replying that she was a lady patroness, and being further pressed to explain what that was said it was a position of honor which permitted everybody to use one's name on their benefit bills and advertisements.

How Bismarck Could Drink.

Count Andrassy's story of an interview he had with Bismarck is as follows:

"Bismarck had two immense mugs of beer brought to us. He took one of them and shoved the other over to me. I remarked that I drank only water. He looked at me in silence, curiously and almost suspiciously for a minute and then proceeded with the subject under discussion. The more interested he became in our conversation the more frequently and copiously he drank. After finishing his own mug he appropriated mine without a word and put down its contents in three or four tremendous drafts. Then he had a servant fetch and fill two enormous pipes. When he offered me one of them, I explained that I never smoked.

"What!" he cried, "neither drink nor smoke? What kind of a supernatural man are you anyway?"

"It was a mercy to both of us, however, that I did not accept the pipe, for Bismarck smoked so incessantly that within 15 minutes the air in the room was dense. When I rose at the end of the evening from the table at which we were sitting, the smoke was so thick that I could hardly see the chancellor's face."

A Convincing Argument.

A correspondent sends us the following story from Mississippi: Counsel for the defense was addressing a country J. P. of the "old school." Said he: "I realize that I stand in the presence of a descendant of the grand old Huguenot family that emigrated from France to escape from religious intolerance. Many able jurists have sprung from that family and embellished the bench and bar of the Union. Their watchwords are honor, truth and justice, and their names are spoken in every home. The law is so plain in this case that 'he who runs may read.' Shall I insult the intelligence of this court by reiterating a proposition so simple? Need I say more?"—"No," interrupted the judge, "'tain't necessary. I'll give you a judgment." Counsel sat down while the judge, with emphasis, knocked the ashes from his cob pipe, and counsel for plaintiff began: "May it please the court?"—"Squire, what are you fixin to do?" asked the judge. "I have the closing argument," was the reply. "Well, you jes' as well set down. I done got my mind sot on the other side. Judgment for defendant."—Law Notes.

No Wonder It Pained.

A tender hearted old woman noticed a horse with a broad rubber band stretched around its leg just above the hoof. She asked the waiting driver of the cab why it was there and suggested that it was more than cruel to place it on the animal.

"Yes, mum," replied the caddy, "it's painful to the horse, no doubt, but that is not the worst of it. It's the getting of it on that pains the poor thing. Why, we had to stretch the band and pull it over the horse's head and down all his body to get it on."

"For the land's sake alive!" exclaimed the woman and walked away horrified.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Georgia Bill of Fare.

A southwest Georgia negro was discovered in the act of chopping a monster alligator into steaks.

"You don't intend to eat him, do you?" he was asked.

"Dat's what I aim ter do wld 'im," was the reply.

"Pretty tough—Isn't it?"

"Yes sah, he's tough, ez you say, but wen you salts en peppers 'im, en suns 'im, he's fillin, suh—he's fillin!"—Atlanta Constitution.

A Bad Steer.

City Editor—Mr. Strong has been in today, and he had murder in his eye. How in time did you come to speak of Mrs. Strong's "alleged husband" in that paragraph about her accident?

J. Fresh—I did it to steer clear of a libel suit. You know you told me always to say "alleged thief," "alleged murderer" and that sort of thing.—Boston Transcript.

And Then Eat Him Up.

One day Tommy accompanied his mother on a shopping expedition, and, seeing a large candy man in a confectioner's window, he paused in front of it with a wistful look; then, turning away, regretfully, he said, "Mamma, I could lick that fellow with both hands wed behind me."—Troy Times.

A Strange Clock.

A strange clock was made during the last century for a French nobleman. The dial was horizontal, and the figures, being hollow, were filled with different sweets or spices. Thus, running his finger along the hand, by tasting, the owner could tell the hour without a light.

Value of Cheese Food.

Cheese is a very rich and valuable food, likely to form a very large constituent in the future and, especially for the workingman, to be very extensively used. There is a difference in stomachs in their ability to digest this article.

The writer is able to make an entire meal of cheese, with very little bread, and digest it more easily than rice or oatmeal, but in most stomachs it is less digestible, in some extremely so. Each person must learn for himself. It is a convenient form of animal food and, when good, particularly agreeable.

There is a great difference in the composition of cheese both in its water, fat and nitrogenous matter. In general, however, it may be remarked that every variety contains a large amount of nitrogenous matter, and it is for this that it is especially useful as a food. Skimmilk cheese is especially rich in this constituent, but less rich in fat. Those who abstain from flesh food will find in cheese abundance of nitrogenous matter to take the place of that found in flesh.—London Family Doctor.

Othello Whitewashed.

Othello is the latest historic disreputable to have a good character established. Italian papers claim certain manuscripts concerning the Moor have been found in the archives of a convent in Venice. They are notes taken in 1542 by a Cretan diplomat sent on a mission to the republic of Venice. The writer knew Othello well and vouches for the fact that the lady was never killed at all. In fact, she survived Othello, died a natural death and gave the coroner no trouble at all. So that there never was a tragedy of the moor of Venice.

The Road to Wealth.

In my opinion, the secret of money making depends chiefly upon five things—push, "squareness," clear headedness, economy and rigid adherence to the rule of not overworking. Too much work is worse than no work at all. It undermines the constitution and unfits a man mentally and physically for the battle of life. Ten hours a day of steady work is as much as any man—no matter how robust—ought to attempt. In addition to these things, avoid being too grasping; better make a small profit by sure means than attempt to make a larger one by uncertain and risky measures.—Andrew Carnegie.

A Dinner Test.

In Siberia there is a good custom that a bride, on coming to her husband's house, has to give a dinner prepared with her own hands as a test of the education she has received. If she succeeds in gratifying her guests, it is taken as a proof not only of the young woman's own excellence, but also as a recommendation of her whole family, by whom she was instructed.

Tin is one of the oldest known metals. The Chinese have used it in the fabrication of their brasses and bronzes from time immemorial.

Not Very Amiable.

"Excuse me!" exclaimed the timorous man, "but may I disturb you for a few minutes on a matter of considerable importance to myself and possibly of some concern to you?"

"No, sir!" replied the disagreeable citizen. "Not unless you promise not to waste as much time talking business as you do apologizing."—Washington Star.

Had Lived a Slow Life.

A negro called at a residence in Beverly, Mass., and asked for assistance and food, and told the lady who assisted him the remarkable fact that he was 75 years of age and was born 80 years ago in Boston.—Exchange.

What to Say About the Baby.

The wise bachelor who is called upon to compliment the new heir of his wedded friend can make himself popular by declaring with emphasis, "Well, that is a baby." There is no gainsaying that. It isn't a bit complimentary and sounds like strong praise.—Philadelphia Times.

Rare Devotion.

"Do you think Dolly's fiance loves her?"

"Indeed he does. Why, he went and made love to that pretty Allbright girl, just to give Dolly a chance to cut her out."—Collier's Weekly.

 Not even the rain could keep Zurich from celebrating the glorious Fourth.

At sunrise the national salute was fired letting the people know that the day we celebrate had arrived. It rained every few minutes during the forenoon. In the afternoon the skies had cleared some and the crowds came flocking in from all directions. The procession was formed under direction of Marshal Seip and marched to Oak park, where the exercises of the day were to be carried out. A brass band of Chicago furnished music and an interesting program was carried out. The pavilion proved to be too small for the dancers. In the evening the people were entertained with a fine display of fireworks. Lake Zurich is certainly a great place to attract a crowd. Its natural advantages make it an ideal place for celebrations and picnics.

Scalloped Oysters.—Select firm plump oysters, and scollop them evenly and neatly with a pair of sharp scissors. Now, with a needle threaded with pink silk, if for a pink tea, or blue if you wish blue points, work a buttonhole stitch round the scallop. When finished, press carefully on the wrong side with a hot iron.

Shirred Eggs.—Carefully remove the shell from a fresh egg, and hold the white and yolk firmly in the left hand. Now, with a fine needle and thread, gather the material in straight rows about half an inch apart. Draw up to the required fullness and fasten neatly the ends of the thread.

His Head Was Turned.
 A quaint story of paternal care on the part of the clergy comes from Kreuzeber, a village in southwest Saxony.

In the middle of his sermon one Sunday the parish priest suddenly stopped, and, changing his voice to a more colloquial tone, said: "Herr Meinhardt, attend to the sermon. From this time forward I shall publicly name every one who looks at the girls during the service."

The unfortunate Herr Meinhardt indignantly repudiated this public reproach, explaining that it was a bolt on the back of his neck that kept his head fixed at an angle which had led to the misunderstanding. — London Leader.

Wanted to Frame It.
 "There!" said the young wife proudly, as she deposited the hot plate carefully on the table. "That's the first mince pie I ever made without any help, all by myself."

"So it is!" exclaimed her husband, enthusiastically, looking it over critically meanwhile. "And as it is the very first, my dear, don't you think that, instead of cutting it, it would be nice to keep it for a souvenir? How would it do to have it framed?" — London Tit-Bits.

 "Remember, boys," said the teacher, "that in the bright lexicon of youth there's no such word as fail."

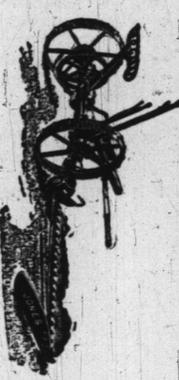

After a few moments a boy raised his hand.

"Well, what is it, my lad?" asked the master.

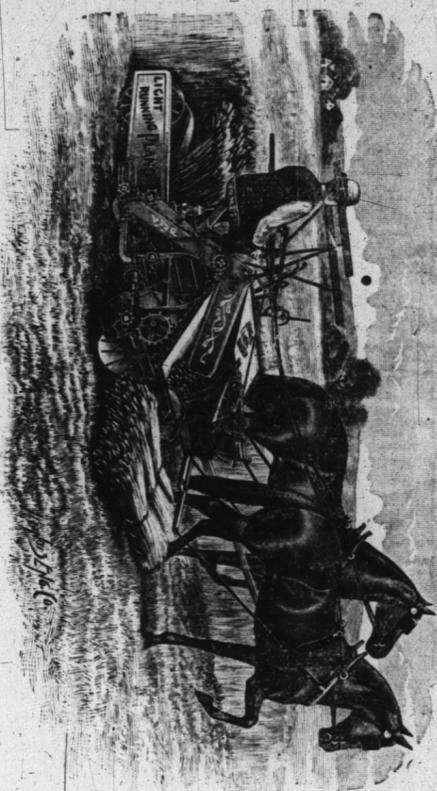

"I was merely going to suggest," replied the youngster, "that if such is the case it would be advisable to write to the publishers of that lexicon and call their attention to the omission."

PHANTOM SHIP

—OR—
The Flying Dutchman.

—BY CAPTAIN MARRYAT.

"We are Hollanders," replied Philip. "A part of the crew of the vessel which was wrecked?" inquired he.

"Yes!"
"You have nothing to fear; you are enemies to the Portuguese, and so are we. We belong to the island of Ternate—our king is at war with the Portuguese, who are villains. Where are your companions? on which island?"

"They are all dead," replied Philip. "May I ask you whether you have fallen in with a woman who was adrift on a part of the raft by herself, or have you heard of her?"

"We have heard that a woman was picked up on the beach to the southward, and carried away by the Tidore people to the Portuguese settlement on the supposition that she was a Portuguese."

"Then God be thanked, she is saved," cried Philip. "Merciful Heaven! accept my thanks! To Tidore you said?"

"Yes; we are at war with the Portuguese, we cannot take you there."

"No! but we shall meet again."

The person who accosted them was evidently of consequence. His dress was, to a certain degree, Mohammedan, but mixed up with Malay; he carried arms in his girdle and a spear in his hand; his turban was of printed cloth; and his deportment, like most persons of rank in that country, was courteous and dignified.

"We are now returning to Ternate, and will take you with us. Our king will be pleased to receive any Hollanders, especially as you are enemies to the Portuguese dogs. I forgot to tell you that we have one of your companions with us in the boat; we picked him up at sea, much exhausted, but he is now doing well."

"Who can it be?" observed Krantz; "it must be some one belonging to some other vessel."

"No," replied Philip, shuddering, "it must be Schriften."

"Then my eyes must behold him before I believe it," replied Krantz.

"Then believe your eyes," replied Philip, pointing to the form of Schriften, who was now walking toward them.

"Mynheer Vanderdecken, glad to see you, Mynheer Krantz, I hope you are well. How lucky that we should all be saved. He! he!"

"The ocean has then, indeed, given up its dead, as I requested," thought Philip.

In the meantime Schriften, without making any reference to the way in which they had so unceremoniously parted company, addressed Krantz with apparent good humor and some slight tinge of sarcasm.

"What do you think of him, Krantz?"

"That he is a part of the whole, and has his destiny to fulfill as well as you. He has his part to play in this wondrous mystery, and will remain until it is finished. Think not of him. Recollect, your Amine is safe."

"True," replied Philip, "the wretch is not worth a thought; we have now nothing to do but to embark with these people; hereafter we may rid ourselves of him and strive then to rejoin my dearest Amine."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

When Amine again came to her senses she found herself lying on the leaves of the palmetto in a small hut. A hideous black child sat by her, brushing off the flies. "Where was she?" She was taken to the Portuguese fort and turned over to the commandant. He subsequently released her under the promise that she would marry him—provided her husband was dead. She sailed for Goa, unexpectedly meeting her old pastor, who was returning from the far East.

We must now again return to Philip and Krantz, who had a long conversation upon the strange reappearance of Schriften. All that they could agree upon was that he should be carefully watched, and that they dispense with his company as soon as possible. Krantz had interrogated him as to his escape, and Schriften had informed him, in his usual sneering manner, that one of the sweeps of the raft had been allowed to get adrift during the scuffle, and that he had floated on it until he had gained a small island; that on seeing the perouca, he had once more launched it, and supported himself by it, until he was perceived and picked up. As there was nothing impossible, although much of the improbable, in this account, Krantz asked no more questions. The next morning the wind having abated, they launched the perouca, and made sail for the island of Ternate.

It was four days before they arrived, as every night they landed and hauled up their craft on the sandy beach. Philip's heart was relieved at the knowledge of Amine's safety, and he could have been happy at the prospect of again meeting her had he not been so constantly fretted by the company of Schriften.

As soon as they arrived at the principal port and town of Ternate, they were conducted to a large cabin, built of palmetto leaves and bamboo, and requested not to leave it until their arrival had been announced to the king. The peculiar courtesy and good breeding of these islanders was the constant theme of remark of Philip and Krantz; their religion, as well as their dress, appeared to be a compound of the Mohammedan and Malay.

After a few hours they were summoned to attend the audience of the king, held in the open air. The king was seated under a portico, attended by a numerous concourse of priests and soldiers. There was much company but little splendor. All who were about the king were robed in white, with white turbans, but he himself was without ornament. The first thing that struck Philip and Krantz when they were ushered into the presence of the king was the beautiful cleanliness which everywhere prevailed; every dress was spotless and white as the sun could bleach it.

Having followed the example of those who introduced them, and saluted the king after the Mohammedan custom, they were requested to be seated; and through the Portuguese interpreters—for the former communication of the islanders with the Portuguese, who had been driven from the place, made the Portuguese language well known by many—a few questions were put by the king, who bade them welcome, and then requested to know how they had been wrecked.

Philip entered into a short detail, in which he stated that his wife had been separated from him; and was, he understood, in the hands of the Portuguese at Tidore. He requested to know if his majesty could assist him in obtaining her release, or in going to join her.

"It is well said," replied the king. "Let refreshments be brought in for the strangers, and the audience is broken up."

In a few minutes there remained of all the court but two or three of the king's confidential friends and advisers; and a collation of curries, fish, and a variety of other dishes was served up. After it was over, the king then said: "The Portuguese are dogs; they are our enemies—will you assist us to fight them? We have large guns, but do not understand the use of them as well as you do. I will send a fleet against the Portuguese at Tidore, if you will assist me. Say, Hollanders, will you fight? You," addressing Philip; "will then recover your wife."

"I will give an answer to you tomorrow," replied Philip. "I must consult with my friend. As I told you before, I was the captain of the ship, and this was my second in command—we will consult together." Schriften, whom Philip had represented as a common seaman, had not been brought up into the presence of the king.

"It is good," replied the king; "tomorrow we will expect your reply."

Philip and Krantz took their leave, and on their return to the cabin, found that the king had sent them, as a present, two complete Mohammedan dresses, with turbans. These were welcome, for their own garments were sadly tattered and very unfit for exposure to the burning sun of those climes. Their peaked hats, too, collected the rays of heat, which were intolerable; and they gladly exchanged them for the white turban. Secretly their money in the Malayan sash, which formed a part of the attire, they soon robbed themselves in the native garments, the comfort of which was immediately acknowledged. After a long consultation it was decided that they should accept the terms offered by the king, as this was the only feasible way by which Philip could hope to reobtain possession of Amine. In ten days all was ready, and the fleet, manned by seven thousand men, made sail for the island of Tidore.

But it met with disaster, Philip and Krantz being among those taken prisoners by the commandant of the Portuguese fort on Island of Tidore. This is the fort to which Amine had been taken.

CHAPTER XXIX.

As every one descants upon the want of comfort in a prison, it is to be presumed that there are no very comfortable ones. Certainly that to which Philip and Krantz were ushered had anything rather than the air of an agreeable residence. It was under the fort, with a very small aperture looking toward the sea for light and air. It was very hot, and moreover destitute of all those little conveniences which add so much to one's happiness in modern houses and hotels. In fact, it consisted of four bare walls and a stone floor, and that was all.

For three weeks they remained in the fort, every day becoming more intimate with the commandant, who often communicated with Krantz, when Philip was not present, turning the conversation upon his love for Amine and entering into a minute detail of all that had passed. Krantz perceived that he was right in his opinion, and that Amine had only been cajoling the commandant that she might escape. But the time passed heavily away with Philip and Krantz, for no vessel made its appearance.

"When shall I see her again?" soliloquized Philip one morning, as he loll'd over the parapet, in company with Krantz.

"See who?" said the commandant, who happened to be at his elbow.

Philip turned round and stammered something unintelligible.

"We were talking of his sister, commandant," said Krantz, taking his arm, and leading him away. "Do not mention the subject to my friend, for it is a very painful one, and forms one reason why he is so inimical to the sex. She was married to his intimate friend, and ran away from her husband; it was his only sister, and the disgrace broke his mother's heart, and has made him miserable. Take no notice of it, I beg."

Some days after this conversation, as they were all three seated at table, a corporal entered, and, saluting the commandant, informed him that a Dutch sailor had arrived at the fort, and wished to know whether he should be admitted. Both Philip and Krantz turned pale at this communication—they had a presentiment of evil, but they said nothing. The sailor was ordered in, and in a few minutes who should make his appearance but their tormentor, the one-eyed Schriften. On perceiving Philip and Krantz seated at the table he immediately exclaimed: "Oh, Captain Philip Vanderdecken, and my good friend Mynheer Krantz, first mate of the good ship Utrecht, I am glad to meet you again."

"Captain Philip Vanderdecken!" roared the commandant, as he sprang from his chair.

"Yes, that is my captain, Mynheer Philip Vanderdecken, and that is my first mate, Mynheer Krantz, both of the good ship Utrecht; we were wrecked together, were we not, mynheer? He! he!"

"Sangre de Vanderdecken! the husband! Corpo del diavolo—is it possible?" cried the commandant, panting for breath, as he seized his long sword with both hands and clinched it with fury. "What, then, I have been deceived, cajoled, laughed at!" Then, after a pause—the veins of his forehead distending so as almost to burst—he continued, with a suppressed voice: "Most noble sir, I thank you; but now it is my turn. What, ho, there! Corporal—men—here, instantly—quick!"

Philip and Krantz felt convinced that all denial was useless. Philip folded his arms and made no reply. Krantz merely observed: "A little reflection will prove to you, sir, that this indignation is not warranted."

"Not warranted!" rejoined the commandant, with a sneer; "you have deceived me; but you are caught in your own trap. I have the paper signed, which I shall not fail to make use of. You are dead, you know, captain; I have your own hand to it, and your wife will be glad to believe it."

"She has deceived you, commandant, to get out of your power, nothing more," said Vanderdecken. "She would spurn a contemptible, withered wretch like yourself were she as free as the wind."

"Go on, go on; it will be my turn soon. Corporal, throw these two men into the dungeon; a sentry at the door till further orders. Away with them! Most noble sir, perhaps your influential friends in Holland and Spain will enable you to get out again."

Philip and Krantz were led away by the soldiers, who were very much surprised at this change of treatment. Schriften followed them; and as they walked across the rampart to the stairs which led to their prison, Krantz, in his fury, burst from the soldiers and bestowed a kick upon Schriften, which sent him several feet forward on his face.

"That was a good one—he! he!" cried Schriften, smiling and looking at Krantz as he regained his legs.

There was an eye, however, which met theirs with an intelligent glance as they descended the stairs to the dungeon. It was that of the soldier Pedro. It told them that there was one friend upon whom they could rely, and who would spare no endeavor to assist them in their new difficulty. It was a consolation to them both; a day of hope which cheered them as they once more descended the narrow steps and heard the heavy key turned which secured them in their dungeon.

HUNDREDS MAY BE DROWNED.

Terrible Flood Disasters Reported from Texas.

APPEALS FOR ASSISTANCE.

Mayor Brashear of Houston Calls for Men and Boats to Go to the Relief—Telegraphic Communication with Flooded District Cut Off.

Another flood disaster, which appears to be worse than that at Calvert, occurred in the Brazos valley, about 100 miles down the river from Calvert, Texas.

Alarming reports are coming in from La Grange and Sealey of loss of life in the vicinity of Brookshire. Houston has been appealed to for help and Mayor Brashear of that city has issued a proclamation calling for men and boats to rescue those in danger. The Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad is sending out relief trains from Houston, La Grange and other points. Telegraphic communication with the new flood districts has been entirely cut off.

Chief Lineman Lowry of the Postal Telegraph company telephoned: "If boats and special trains from Houston or other points have not yet reached Brookshire, they are too late. The people, I fear, will be drowned before they can be reached. There are from 300 to 400 persons on a small island near Brookshire, and the water is rising rapidly. I fear they will be drowned, as they have not the slightest means of escape."

The damage to property is enormous, estimated by some as high as $9,000,000.

Gov. Sayers has issued an appeal for funds, and the work of relief and rescue is being systematically carried on.

COLORADO PARKS.

Nature's Storehouses of Health in the Rocky Mountains.

The season of summer travel, with its delights of recreation and new scenery, change of air and forgetfulness of business cares and duties, is again upon us, and the question most considered in cottage and spacious home is, "Where shall we spend our summer vacation?" The answer is equally important to those of limited means and their more fortunate neighbors. Those who live in the central west naturally seek the higher altitudes, and the neighboring state of Colorado furnishes near and comparatively inexpensive and delightful resorts. The Union Pacific has expended vast sums of money in its efforts to provide health and comfort for its passengers to Colorado, and its lines reach the most desirable points; and traverse the immense parks which Nature has established in the mountains. To fully understand the Colorado parks they must be seen. No description can do them justice, and neither the skill of a Bierstadt or Moran could picture their pure atmosphere—so like the breath from Paradise—nor reproduce their beautiful colors and forms. In the city a park is a huge square, with trees in checker-board primness, where the lakes have fish as tame as chickens; the animals are in cages, and are neither attractive nor natural. But how different in a mountain park! The range kindly parts to give it room and shields it in its great arms. There are grassy hills and dales where feed the noblest game, and trees which shelter birds of plumage and song. The lakes—some of them miles in length—are rippled by the coming and going of ducks and geese. The streams bear along, eager for the bait of the angler, the speckled loads of trout, most delicious as they brown over the evening's coals. There are no precise graveled walks, and no elaborate fountains, but the footfall is lost on the turf, and springs gush forth with sparkling tune to gladden the thirsty with a liquid such as never ran through the rusty pipes of a city. The altitude gives coolness without chill, and warmth without oppressive heat. "The Overland" is the name given to the Union Pacific Railroad and it has become a synonym for comfortable travel. The equipment of its trains is up to the standard required by modern tourists, and it makes the best time and traverses a scenic route which has made it famous.

No better advice may be offered to those who are weary of the heat and care of home than to apply to the nearest agent of the Union Pacific for tickets by its route to the coolness and pleasures of Colorado parks.

A Shattered Wreck.

Mrs. Fleecem—"And your client was acquitted on the ground of insanity! Why, he had threatened to kill the man on sight, and did so. He surely acted perfectly sane." Lawyer Fleecem—"I know it, but I made his insanity very manifest to the jury. I asked him if he thought the annexation of the Philippines would be dangerous to the country. What do you think the poor, demented creature said? He said he didn't know!"

Manila Hemp Not Hemp at All.

One of the most valuable products of our new possessions, the Philippine Islands, is what is called Manila hemp, which is not hemp at all, but is obtained from a plant belonging to the plantain family. Trees of three years' growth yield only about two-thirds of a pound of fiber each; a bale of 270 pounds, therefore, represents the three years' production of about 400 trees. The Deering twine mills at Chicago consume an immense amount of this fiber, manufacturing one-third of all the binder twine used in America.

New Laws Adopted—Grand Lodge Session at St. Louis.

The Home Forum Benefit Order of Chicago, Illinois, has just held its Biennial Session at St. Louis, Mo., delegates being present from twenty-five states and territories. The order reported an increase of over 20,000 in the past Biennial period in growth of membership. Some changes were made in the by-laws of the Order providing for more general representation in electing officers of the Grand Forum. They provided for increase in assessment rates which has proven very popular in the organization in order they might accumulate reserve fund for protection of their policy holders in the future. These assessment rates have received the endorsement of Insurance Commissioners. The action of the Grand Body was very harmonious, the entire laws being passed unanimously. The report showed $1,305,566.40 paid to beneficiaries and the growth of the order extended into new fields and increasing steadily in the older states where the order has been established for the past seven years.

The officers elected to the Grand Lodge at St. Louis were as follows: Dr. P. L. McKinnin, Chicago, Ill., Grand President; Rev. C. E. Thomas, Sturgis, Mich., 1st Grand Vice-President; J. O. Jones, Delavan, Ill., 2d Grand Vice-President; Frank Clendenin, Joliet, Ill., Grand Secretary; S. J. Caswell, Rockford, Ill., Grand Treasurer; S. W. Heath, Brooklyn, Iowa, Grand Orator; R. S. Ware, Chicago, Ill., Grand Assistant Orator; A. B. Harriott, Grand Island, Neb., Grand Historian; A. E. Shulater, Atlanta, Ga., Grand Guard; P. Since the adjournment of the Grand Lodge, May 5th, up to June 23d, over 2,000 new applications have been written on the increased assessment rates. The new certificate also provides under the new law for an old age disability benefit at 70 years, and other improvements on the advanced lines of fraternal insurance.

The main offices of the Order are located at No. 56 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, Dr. P. L. McKinnin, President; Frank Clendenin, Secretary.

First Greater America Exposition Offers a Splendid Opportunity to Study Our Colonial Possessions—Omaha, July 1 to November 1, 1899.

The dominant purpose of the Greater America Exposition project, is to bring the American people into actual contact with representative types of the natives of the Philippine islands, as well as those of Cuba, Porto Rico and Hawaii; and the products and resources of their soil and industries; point out the commercial possibilities of a closer union; and afford the widest possible information on every phase of the pending question of expansion. This it is proposed to do by comprehensive exhibits, not only from the Philippine islands, but from the other islands named.

The first acquisition of colonial territory by the United States was of such recent occurrence that this first formal manifestation of the chief characteristics of these acquired lands is fraught with an importance not readily conceived, but which must commend this enterprise to all thoughtful citizens who are patriotically bent on so solving every great national question as to best insure the progress and perpetuity of the republic. Never before did any great exposition project contemplate the enlightenment of the people of the country upon a question that so thoroughly occupied and perplexed the public mind as does the question of national territorial expansion. Upon the wisdom of the absorption by this republic of the fertile tropical lands wrested from Spain by the recent war, the greatest minds are divided, and their earnest contention finds its reflection in the apprehensions, perplexities, aspirations and hopes of the humblest citizens, who are equally earnest in combating or upholding, with undoubted patriotic zeal, the contemplated national policy of expansion. As a matter of fact, few adherents of either side of this great controversy are adequately equipped with the knowledge best calculated to lead them to a wise solution of the problem. While Americans are heatedly discussing the capacity or the Filipino for self government, or his adaptability to enlightened citizenship, none of us, with the exception of the few returning and heroic promoters of American arms and valor on far shores have ever seen a Filipino. Fourteen months ago most of us had never heard the name. Those who recalled their childhood's lessons knew that there was somewhere, few knew just where, a group of sea-girt lands known as the Philippine islands; but it was the reverberating echoes of the valiant Dewey's unerring guns that fixed in the American vocabulary the word Filipino.

Aside from this pre-eminently interesting and novel phase of the Greater America Exposition project, it is proposed to present the most comprehensive and instructive exhibition of American ingenuity, and industrial handicraft, ever attempted. The wonderful perfection and economy of American manufacturing industry will be shown as never before, and in a charmingly interesting and instructive way, by means chiefly of live exhibits, or model factories in actual operation and turning out their finest products, with every period of their mysterious processes visible to the eye of the observer.

The Greater America project is unique also in that it is the first of its kind ever projected and carried to a conclusion without having first made heavy drafts upon public treasuries, and exacted large sums of the money of taxpayers without their individual sanction. It has asked no appropriations from state or national governments, but its purposes have so commended themselves that several of the departments of the national government have voluntarily offered the management such aid as was found possible in the collection and transportation and transportation of the proposed insular exhibits which has materially advanced the plans of the management.

What a Little Faith Did FOR MRS. ROCKWELL.

[LETTER TO MRS. PINKHAM NO. 69,884]

"I was a great sufferer from female weakness and had no strength. It was impossible for me to attend to my household duties. I had tried everything and many doctors, but found no relief.

"My sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did; before using all of one bottle I felt better. I kept on with it and to my great surprise I am cured. All who suffer from female complaints should give it a trial."—MRS. ROCKWELL, 1209 S. DIVISION ST., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

From a Grateful Newark Woman.

"When I wrote to you I was very sick, had not been well for two years. The doctors did not seem to help me, and one said I could not live three months. I had womb trouble, falling, ulcers, kidney and bladder trouble. There seemed to be such a drawing and burning pain in my bowels that I could not rest anywhere. After using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash and following your advice, I feel well again and stronger than ever. My bowels feel as if they had been made over new. With many thanks for your help, I remain, L. G., 74 ANN ST., NEWARK, N. J."

Would Not Suffer So Again for Fifty Times Its Cost

I awoke last night with severe pains in my stomach. I never felt so badly in all my life. When I came down to work this morning I felt so weak I could hardly work. I went to Miller & McCurdy's drug store and they recommended Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It worked like magic and one dose fixed me all right. It certainly is the finest thing I ever used for stomach trouble. I shall not be without it in my house hereafter, for I should not care to endure the sufferings of last night again for fifty times its price.—G. H. WILSON, Liveryman, Burgetstown, Washington Co., Pa. This remedy is for sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.
