According to the latest reports, which are brought down to about Sept. 1, stocks of gold in the imperial banks of Europe aggregate $1,481,370,000. Add to this amount the gold coin and bullion in the treasury of the United States and in the clearing house vaults in New York, about $550,000,000 in all, and a total available stock of gold in excess of $2,000,000,000 can be counted up to the present time. The amounts in the great banks of Europe are as given in the following statement:

Bank of England.....	$193,275,000
Bank of France.....	386,195,000
Bank of Russia.....	454,715,000
Austria-Hungary bank.....	152,400,000
Imperial Bank of Germany.....	210,815,000
Bank of Spain.....	64,800,000
National Bank of Belgium.....	22,400,000
Netherlands bank.....	1,710,000
Total.....	$1,481,370,000

A New Jersey man has suggested that, in order to do away with all controversy as to the best name for the horseless carriage, it should be called the Dewey. Just why is not apparent. But this is perhaps as plausible a solution of the problem as has yet been submitted. In these days anything bearing the name of Dewey "goes." But does the automobile always go?

A picture of Admiral Dewey purporting to have been taken during the civil war shows him with whiskers like those of General Otis. It should be remembered, however, that Dewey was then a young man, and it should not be counted against him.

Public Interest In Road Building.

Public interest in the improvement of country highways is attested in a significant manner by the presence of over 700 delegates at the good roads convention recently held in Milwaukee. As Governor Scofield said in his address of welcome at Milwaukee, the future prosperity of the industrial classes will depend not upon large advances in prices of farm products, but rather upon the ability to reduce to the minimum the cost of production. If the farmer had followed the example set by the manufacturers and had studied more closely the cost-per pound of getting his products into a market, we would now have much better roads than we have.

Singularly enough, the farmers are slowest to appreciate the advantages to be reaped from improved highways. The many defeats met by legislative attempts to provide a system of state aid for road building can nearly all be traced to the opposition of the farmers. The Curtis good roads bill which was introduced in the last general assembly in New York state was a most meritorious measure in that it embodied the results of the experience of those states that have made greatest progress in road building. It embraced the principle of state co-operation in the construction of highways, which has been found to be the only practical and effective plan for inaugurating a system of road building throughout a state. Patches of good roads in widely separated counties are of little benefit to the state as a whole. The system must be general and comprehensive, based upon a progressive plan that requires the completion of a certain number of miles of roads each year.

Until farmers throughout the country are more willing to give legislation of this character their hearty support than they have heretofore been very little progress is likely to be made in practical road building.

The recent terrible disaster at a grade crossing of the Central Railroad of New Jersey at Seabright again calls attention to the dangers of such crossings. The fault in this instance rests quite as much with the local authorities as with the railroads or the state. There is a law in New Jersey which is extremely liberal toward villages and towns in this respect. It requires local taxpayers to pay only one-fourth of the cost of removing grade crossings, the rest of the cost being divided between the state and the railroad companies. It is asserted by the railroad commissioners of that state that in many of the attempts made by them to do away with dangerous grade crossings like that at Seabright they have met with stubborn refusal on the part of local taxpayers to bear their share of the expense, while in scarcely any instance have railroad companies objected to paying their share, one-half of the total cost. The commissioners say that it is next to impossible to get villages and townships that would be benefited by the removal of these deathtraps to bear any part of the expense of the work. It is the old difficulty of securing good roads. All committees are eager for safe, broad, smooth and direct highways, but many of them want somebody else to pay the bill. The public demand, however, is that something should be done toward accelerating the present very slow work of abolishing the deadly grade crossing.

A newspaper train on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad recently covered the distance between New York and Buffalo, 410 miles, in 7 hours and 20 minutes. Various fast schedules have proved that locomotives can be regularly run at speeds up to 70 miles per hour and upward, and that with safety and regularity. If it is desired to increase these speeds to 100 miles per hour, locomotive designers could no doubt be found who would undertake to provide a machine to accomplish the work. Larger driving wheels, lighter reciprocating parts and more careful balancing are some of the means by which higher speeds could be made as feasible as are the speeds at present reached. It is worth noting that none of our present day locomotives uses drivers as large as those in use many years ago on some famous English locomotives of high speed.

GALLIFET ON THE "CLOSED INCIDENT."

The order to the corps commanders issued by the French minister of war will hardly please the rabid anti Dreyfusards. They doubtless expected from the chief of the army whose "honor" has been so strongly vindicated a more or less positive approval of the Rennes verdict. But his language is guarded and noncommittal. He declares the incident closed, and asks—adding that, if necessary, he will command—that the officers and men forget the past in order that they may devote themselves to the problems of the future. The important assurance is given that "there can be no further question of reprisals of any kind." The government wants peace, and certainly nothing is better and safer for the generals.

INDIAN WITCHCRAFT.

A story of Indian superstition and cold blooded murder has been divulged in the course of the trial at Edmonton, in the northwest territories of Canada, of a Cree Indian who had brutally killed another member of the tribe. There was no denial of the killing, the accused readily admitting that he had shot down his victim quite intentionally and in cold blood. The remarkable defense that he set up was that his victim was a "Windigo," and, according to the rules of the tribe, it was necessary that he should be killed. So successful was this defense that the accused was saved from the gallows, and upon a verdict of simple manslaughter will escape with a few years' imprisonment.

VENEZUELA BOUNDARY.

The discussion over the Venezuela boundary question before the arbitration committee continues. Gen. Harrison is now talking and is making a good showing for Venezuela. Dispatches from Paris say: "Continuing his argument in behalf of Venezuela before the boundary arbitration commission today, ex-President Benjamin Harrison said the issue of diplomatic correspondence showed that Great Britain had never claimed more than the Dutch had. He held that the legal and political departments of the British foreign office did not seem to agree, the latter taking its inspiration from the surveyor, Sir Robert Schomburgk, while Sir Richard Webster, the British attorney-general, went further and claimed the extended Schomburgk line."

IRON STILL KING.

That the growth in the production of pig iron and iron and steel manufactures generally is likely to continue for the present seems to be the consensus of opinion both in the United States and elsewhere. The Railway and Engineering Review, discussing the phenomenal increase in iron manufacturing in the United States, which shows an increase of 33 per cent in the exportation of iron and steel during the last year, says that "the expansion of the iron and steel making capacity and projection of new mills and furnaces announced in the trade journals generally shows that the year 1900 will be one of phenomenal activity and expansion."

A TRAGIC SUICIDE.

A tragic suicide occurred at the Hotel Majestic in New York early the other morning. Mrs. Horace Chenery, young, beautiful and refined, threw herself from a fifth story window of the hotel and was almost instantly killed. Mrs. Chenery was 25 years old. She had been in delicate health for some time and had come to the hotel six weeks ago from her home in Larchmont to be near the office of her physician, who was treating her for a nervous trouble. The people at the hotel knew little regarding Mrs. Chenery's family, beyond the fact that she was a daughter of George A. Fuller of Chicago, and that her husband was wealthy and the son of a retired naval officer.

MEXICO SETS AN EXAMPLE.

Chicago, with an annual revenue of about $35,000,000, has experienced some difficulty in raising $100,000 for the purpose of entertaining her guests during the fall festival, while Mexico, with an annual revenue of about $50,000,000, has given President Diaz $100,000 for pocket money in order that he may disport himself with credit during his visit to this city.

RELIC OF OLD DAYS.

A New Albany, Ind., girl has sustained injuries to the spine that deprived her of her voice through the playful birthday beating. This form of assault and battery on birthdays ought to follow the rice and old boot demonstrations at weddings into the limbo reserved for the cast-off relics of savagery.

DEWEY SURPRISES NEW YORK.

Admiral Comes in Two Days Ahead of Schedule Time.

Much to the surprise of every one in that city the Olympia, with Admiral Dewey on board, arrived off the Sandy Hook lightship at 5:55 Tuesday morning. There was a heavy mist on the sea, and at first the marine observers were inclined to think the vessel sighted might be Rear Admiral Howison's flagship, the Chicago, hardly believing Admiral Dewey would arrive two days ahead of time. The doubt was soon cleared away, however, and as passing vessels recognized the flagship from Manila bay there was a continuous blowing of whistles in salute. The Olympia sailed from Gibraltar Sept. 10. One of the first large vessels to sight the Olympia was the passenger steamer Sandy Hook of the Sandy Hook line, which left Atlantic Highlands shortly after 7 o'clock for her New York dock. Just as she got well under way a war vessel was seen through the fog, and passengers and crew, headed by the Sandy Hook's captain, gathered at the rail to read the newcomer's name. To get near enough to do this the Sandy Hook changed her course and headed directly for the Olympia, blowing her whistle in salute as she did so. As soon as the name was made out the Sandy Hook's passengers cheered with all their might, and in a few moments officially noticed by the commanding officers.

It had been planned that one of the fleet, probably the Texas, would go down to the Hook and escort the admiral's flagship to her anchorage inside the Hook, but, of course, this plan had to be abandoned.

When the Olympia reached the upper bay Admiral Dewey found that the quarantine station was gaily decorated with 1,500 red, white and blue electric lights. On the terrace are letters nine feet high, spelling "Welcome home." They are set against a natural background of green, and show white in the day time and are lighted with electricity at night.

When the Olympia, on the day of the Dewey naval parade, rounds the stake boat in North river, the school ship St. Mary's, the boys wearing their white working suits, will man the yards in the saluting custom which obtained when Dewey was a junior officer. This, it is believed, will recall pleasant memories to the admiral and will make a display that is novel in these days of steel ships with masts that are only used for military purposes.

The admiral's early arrival was a matter of great concern to the city an answering cheer came over the water from the warship's sailors, many of whom were gathered on deck.

The flagship came up to the lower bay and anchored inside Sandy Hook. As soon as the anchor was dropped an orderly was sent ashore with dispatches from the admiral and other officers. He said the ship had had a pleasant trip across the Atlantic and that all on board were well and glad to be home again.

The Olympia's crew was put to work immediately cleaning ship.

For the first time in many years an admiral's salute was fired in New York bay. Fort Hancock saluted with seventeen guns when the Olympia passed, coming in.

There was no demonstration of an official character in Rear Admiral Sampson's fleet off Tompkinsville when the news of the Olympia's arrival was received. Signals announcing Dewey's arrival were hoisted, and there was considerable cheering, which, although a violation of the strict rules and regulations of the navy, was not authorities who were arranging for New York's official welcome. Secretary Foster of the reception committee went to the city hall early and at once issued a call for a special meeting of the committee.

Mayor Van Wyck hurried to his office where he found the following telegram:

"Olympia arrived this morning. Will go to Tompkinsville tomorrow. "GEORGE DEWEY."

The mayor advised the calling together of all the city's committees, and telegrams were sent out calling on the members of the plan and scope committee and the various sub-committees to meet as quickly as possible at the city hall. St. Clair McKelway, the chairman of the sub-committee of the reception committee, was the first to arrive.

The Sandy Hook steamer Monmouth passed the Olympia early in the morning and those on board of her were the first to see Admiral Dewey.

FILIPINOS DITCH A TRAIN.

Two Americans Killed and Six Wounded in a Skirmish.

Fifty insurgents, commanded by three officers, blew up a train three miles north of Calcut. The rebels fired volleys from ambush, and then charged upon the train, whereupon a hand-to-hand conflict lasting for some minutes ensued. The rebels were finally beaten off. The American loss was two killed and six wounded. Others are missing. The insurgent loss is not known.

Extra Session Not Likely.

Although there is great pressure being brought to bear upon the president by currency reformers to call an extra session to enact financial legislation, it is the general belief these demands will not be acceded to.

INDIANA'S CLAIM IS DENIED.

Can Not Recover Money from the Federal Government.

L. P. Mitchell, assistant comptroller of the treasury, in the matter of the application of the state of Indiana for the reopening of a settlement of the balance of the claim of the state for $606,979, has decided that, although in his judgment the claim is a perfectly just one, he is without power to afford any remedy, and therefore the application is denied.

HOW I SPENT MY VACATION.

Just a brief description of how I spent my vacation this year, with little more expense than the salary earned during my trip, may not be amiss. It was a most delightful change from the hated and dusty pavements to roll over the boundless prairies and view from the car windows of a Missouri Pacific train the magnificent scope of country between here and Pueblo. There is no coolness like that which comes with the shades of night on these vast plains, filled then with waving corn and ripening wheat. There is no more bracing air than that with which one refreshes his lungs in the early morning when the mountains of Colorado are just coming into view, the mighty Pike's Peak reaching the vision long before its lowlier neighbors. When taken comfortably, there is no pleasanter ride than over this same garden spot of the Western world which in our geographical was laid down as the Great American Desert. So we rode into Pueblo and thence by the Denver and Rio Grande road to Denver, a fair city with all the comforts and handsome buildings of her older sisters of the East and lying in an altitude far above the air we breathe in our homes, a gem in an emerald setting of never yielding mountain heights. Continuing our journey over the Denver and Rio Grande and the Rio Grande Western roads we started for Salt Lake City, the capitol of the new state, which has been aptly termed the "Mountain Walled Treasury of the Gods." And thus we are permitted to pass through the most varied and entrancing scenery of the Rocky Mountains and to witness the wonders of the Royal Gorge, where the cunning of man has overcome the difficulties presented by Nature in her efforts at the grotesque and the sublime. These chained out attention and draw breathless expressions, especially when crossing some chasm on an almost impossible bridge structure with a roaring brawling stream beneath us. It is inspiring and grand every foot of the way to Salida and from there many other devoted attractions we visited. Perhaps that which will most interest a large number of my fellow carriers is Marshall's Pass, that marvelous testimonial to American engineering skill. As the altitude grows greater the view becomes less obstructed. Miles of cone-shaped summits are in view. We are in and above the home of the clouds. We see the snow covered spires of the Sangre de Cristo range. To our right is the fire scarred front of old Ouray. We reach the summit at an altitude of 10,852 feet. From this point a magnificent view can be had of the Sargre de Cristo range. The pass is a scenic and scientific wonder; grades of 211 feet to the mile are frequent. The streams from the summit flow eastward into the Atlantic and westward into the Pacific. We are impressed with the feeling that we are on the pinnacle of the world.

It would require much space to tell of all the beauties of this trip and of the pleasures of our stay in the City of the Prophets. There are many points of interest and among those that claimed our attention were, naturally, the Mormon Temple and Tabernacle; Fort Douglas, United States Military Post, three miles; White Sulphur Springs, one mile; Beck's Hot Springs, three miles; Liberty Park, one mile; Calder's Park, three miles; together with other attractions and drives too numerous to mention. Thirteen miles from the city is located the magnificent bathing resort, Saltair Beach, on Great Salt Lake, the finest salt water bathing resort in the world.

Let me urge upon my friends to try this trip during some vacation. It will well repay the expense in the restoration of health, the broadening of the mind and the addition it will give to each one's general information, tending thus to raise his standard of citizenship and to help himself and his brothers thereby.

GREETING TO ADMIRAL DEWEY.

THE TRIUMPHAL ARCH

IN A BLAZE OF GLORY.

Now that all eyes are turned towards New York harbor and the Olympia, there is an intense interest in everything relating to the man who is receiving evidence of the devotion felt for him since that memorable May day in 1898 when he sunk the Spanish fleet in Manila bay.

George Dewey was born in Montpelier, Vt., on Dec. 26, 1837. The admiral is the ninth generation in this country.

The admiral's grandfather, Simeon, moved from Hanover, N. H., to Berlin, near Montpelier, where Julius G. Dewey, the father of George, was born in 1801. In 1822 the father removed to Montpelier, and three years later married Miss Mary Perrin, who became the mother of four children—Charles, Edward, George and Mary.

After attending school for a year at Morrisville, George Dewey went to the famous Norwich Military academy to complete his education, as it was supposed at the time. The Norwich university, which has been located at Northfield, Vt., for many years, has been called the "nursery of heroes." Dewey entered it in 1851 and remained for three years. At the university he was given the nickname of "Doc" for the irrelevant reason that his father was a physician. He was one of the most popular cadets in the institution and added to his reputation as a student, an athlete and a fighter. He led the university forces in one historic "battle of the torn coats" against the cohorts of Dartmouth college, and displayed both bravery and strategic skill.

Dewey entered the naval academy on Sept. 23, 1854, and when he was graduated, four years later he stood fifth in a large class. He excelled in the study of seamanship, however, and after a year on the training ship his rank in the class was fourth.

The life of cadet Dewey at Annapolis was not particularly eventful. There was considerable hot blood between the northern and southern cadets toward the close of his term, and Dewey did not escape his share of encounters with the southerners, nor did he seek to. He always gave as good as was sent, whether in blows or words. One day a stalwart southerner made an insulting remark to him across the dinner table. Dewey waited for him outside of the mess-room, and when he appeared, promptly knocked him down. This precipitated a general fight, out of which Dewey and his companions came first best.

Dewey's first assignment to active duty in the navy was to the old steam frigate Wabash, then on the Mediterranean station. At the end of a year he returned to Annapolis for his final examinations. He was at his home in Montpelier when the first shot of the civil war was fired at Fort Sumter, and one week later he received his commission as a lieutenant and was assigned to duty on the sloop-of-war Mississippi of the West Gulf squadron, then operating under Admiral Farragut. The Mississippi was a sidewheeler and was commanded by Melancthon Smith.

Dewey received his baptism of fire at Forts Jackson and St. Philip, below New Orleans, and not at Port Hudson, as has been repeatedly declared. It was during a dash past the forts, and little damage was done on either side.

Dewey's first meeting with Farragut took place on the sloop Mississippi, in which the admiral was making a reconnaissance up the river. The confederates had a disagreeable habit of running their field pieces up to earthworks along the bank, firing point blank at the steamer and then scuttling away before their shots could be answered.

Farragut was seated on the quarter deck and Lieut. Dewey was standing near him when a shot shrieked past the latter's head, and he involuntarily dodged.

"Why don't you stand firm, lieutenant?" asked the admiral. "Don't you know you can't jump quick enough?" A few hours later a shot passed near the smaller gunboats of Farragut's squadron, and in 1861 he was appointed executive officer of the gunboat Agowan, a sidewheeler carrying eight guns and attached to the north Atlantic squadron. This squadron was assigned to help Gen. Grant in his operations around City Point and Petersburg, and for a long time the men were kept busy fighting and dodging torpedoes. During this period Dewey is described as active, alert, prompt, and a strict but not harsh disciplinarian.

Later Dewey was transferred to the steam frigate Colorado and on board that ship participated in the famous attack on and capture of Fort Fisher. Of this engagement Admiral Porter wrote: "No vessel in the squadron was so much cut-up as the Colorado. For some reason the rebels selected it for a target." On the Colorado three were killed, fourteen wounded and twenty-two missing.

On March 3, 1865, Dewey was made a lieutenant commander and assigned to duty on the famous old sloop Kearsarge soon after its victory over the Alabama.

At the close of the war he was again assigned to the Colorado, which was at that time the flagship of the European squadron.

the event of war the fighting would fall to the ships of those two squadrons. Great pressure was brought to bear on the department for appointment to the command of the European squadron to succeed Admiral Selfridge, whose retirement was near at hand. It lay between Admiral Howell and Dewey, and the supposed prize was finally awarded to the former. It is probable that Dewey did not feel his disappointment as keenly as he might have done if he had not mapped out in his mind the capture of Manila just a quarter of a century before.

On April 25 congress declared that a state of war had existed since April 21, and immediately Dewey was cabled instructions to capture or destroy the Spanish fleet at Manila. Great Britain issued a proclamation of neutrality, and by its terms Dewey was notified to leave Hongkong within twenty-four hours. He proceeded at once to Mirs bay and made ready for the assault on the Spanish fleet. Within forty-eight hours he was on his way to Manila.

The following chronology of the Olympia gives the other important events in Dewey's life as they occurred:

April 23—Olympia, flagship of Commodore Dewey, was at anchor in the harbor of Hongkong on April 23, the day war was declared by the United States of America against the kingdom of Spain. Late in the afternoon of that day Commodore Dewey was given formal notice by the governor of the colony of Hongkong that a state of war existed between the two countries, and that as Great Britain was a neutral power, all of the vessels under the command of Dewey would be required to "quit the waters of the colony" within forty-eight hours, or by Monday, April 25.

April 24—On Sunday, April 24, the commanding officers of the Boston, Concord, Petrel, McCulloch, Nashan and Zafiro were ordered by Commodore Dewey to get under way at noon and proceed to Mirs bay, which is in Chinese waters, twenty-five miles from Hongkong. Just at 12 o'clock the vessels steamed out of Lyemun Pass with all the foreign population of Hongkong watching their departure.

April 25—Commodore Dewey, with the Olympia, the Baltimore and the Raleigh, left Hongkong for Mirs bay at 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, April 25.

April 27—American fleet of six warships, with the Olympia leading, and the three auxiliary ships, with the McCulloch leading in line with the flagship and 1,000 yards off the starboard bow, left Mirs bay on Wednesday, April 27, and set course direct for Cape Bolinao, on the coast of Luzon.

April 30—Saturday morning, April 30, the coast of Luzon was sighted, 150 miles north of Corregidor island, at the entrance to the bay of Manila. During the day the fleet coasted south along the western line of the island, exploring Subig bay, where it was thought probable the Spanish fleet would be concealed, and reaching the entrance to the bay at midnight. At 12:30, or one-half hour into the morning of May 1, the American ships were fired on by the Spanish fort at El Fraile, in the great passage called Boca Grande. This fire was returned by the Raleigh, the McCulloch and Boston, but no damage was inflicted on either side.

May 1—Commodore George Dewey, in command of the United States naval force on the Asiatic station, defeated the Spanish fleet under the command of Rear Admiral Montojo on the morning of Sunday, May 1. The Spanish fleet of eleven vessels was annihilated, 300 Spaniards being killed and 400 wounded, while on the American side none was killed, six were slightly wounded, and the American ships were uninjured.

Manila, enforcing the blockade that had been inaugurated after the battles of May 1.

Aug. 13—Aug. 13 the combined land and naval forces of the United States captured the city of Manila by assault ending Spanish rule in the Philippines.

May 20, 1899—The Olympia, with Admiral Dewey on board, sailed from Manila by way of the Mediterranean for New York, scheduled to arrive there Sept. 27.

New York harbor has for ten days been alive with warships of other nations as well as of our own.

For his glorious work Dewey was first made a rear admiral, and then, by special act of congress, an admiral, taking a precedent of all other officers of the navy. He was also voted a sword by congress, a popular subscription was started to purchase him a home in Washington, and preparations made for giving him a wonderful reception in New York on his return.

Admiral Dewey's modesty of nature was never better illustrated than in his two official dispatches to Washington announcing his great victory. On May 1 he cabled:

"The squadron arrived at daybreak this morning. Immediately engaged the enemy and destroyed the following Spanish war vessels: Reina Cristina, Castilla, Ulloa, Isla de Cuba, General Lezo, Isla de Luzon, Duero, Correo, Velasco, Mindanao, one transport and the water battery at Cavite. The squadron is uninjured and only a few men were slightly wounded. The only means of telegraphing is to the American consul at Hongkong. I shall communicate with him.

"DEWEY."

His second dispatch was on May 4, and reads:

"I have taken possession of naval station at Cavite, on Philippine islands. Have destroyed the fortifications at bay entrance, paroling garrison. I control bay completely and can take city at any time. The squadron is in excellent health and spirits. Spanish loss not fully known, but very heavy—150 killed, including captain of Reina Cristina. I am assisting in protecting Spanish sick and wounded. Two hundred and fifty sick and wounded in hospital within our lines. Much excitement at Manila. Will protect foreign residents. DEWEY."

TO WELCOME IOWA TROOPS.

Regiment from the Philippines Will Be Given an Elaborate Reception.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 25.—A cablegram received by Gov. Shaw announces that the soldiers of the Fifty-first Iowa volunteers sailed from Manila on Thursday afternoon, according to plans.

It is estimated that they will be twenty-four days on the way if they do not stop at Honolulu. This will bring them to Iowa in time for the November state election, unless an unexpectedly long time is taken to muster out the troops at San Francisco.

Since the news of the sailing of the transport Senator has arrived, the mothers of the Iowa soldiers in this city have begun active preparations to give the boys a glorious welcome home. There will be parades, receptions, banquets, speeches by the governor, and official and other occasions, the whole celebration occupying several days.

The boys will be guests of honor at a reception to the whole of Iowa at the capitol building on the day after they reach here. Delegations of G. A. R. men will also be in the line.

The plan to bring all the Iowa boys back to Des Moines at the expense of the state immediately after their discharge is assured of success and practically completed.

New Army Plan for Philippines.

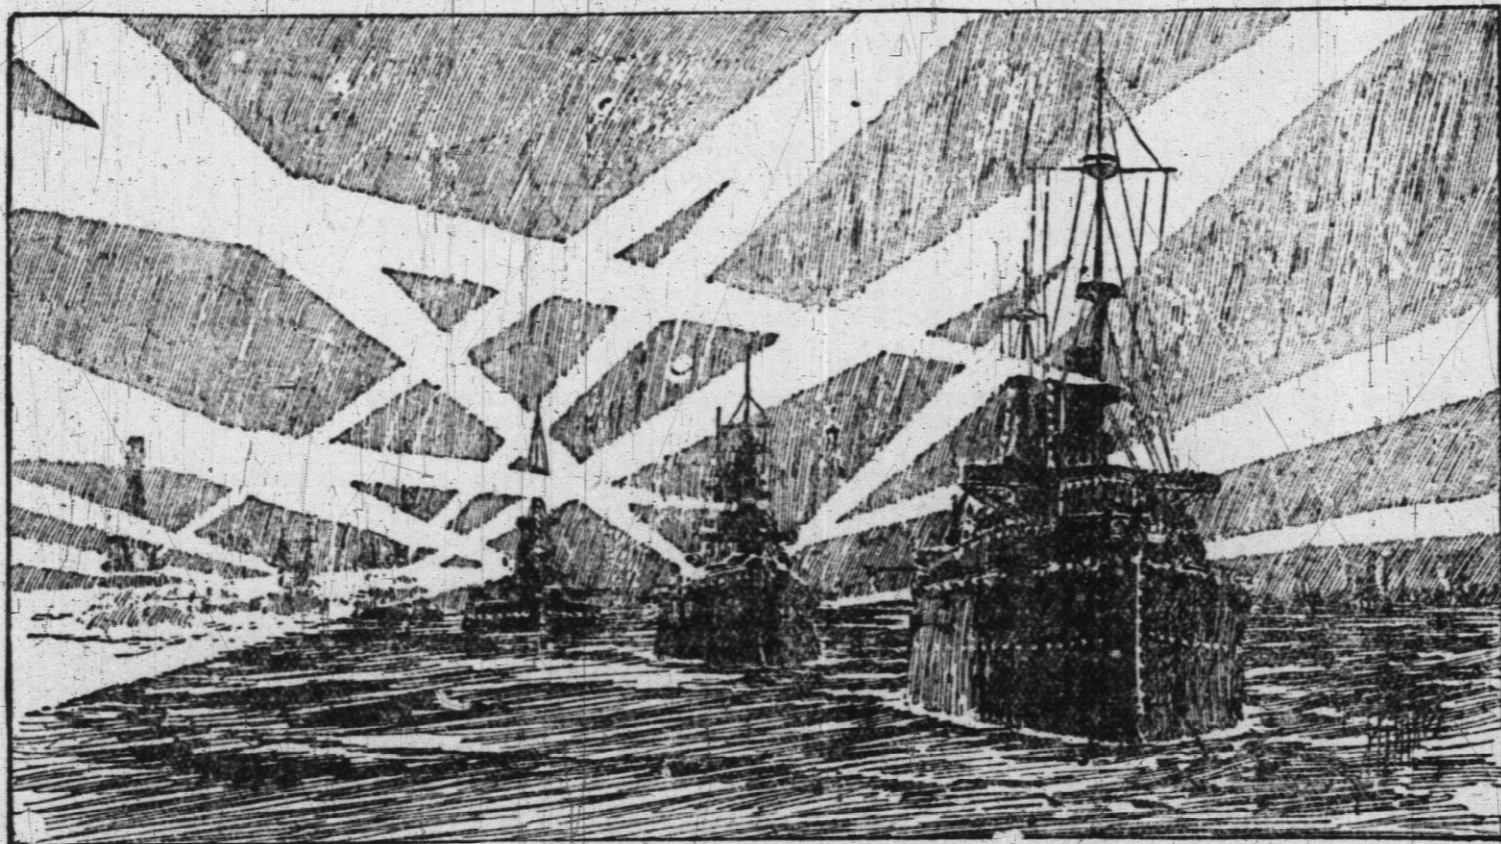

Washington, Sept. 25.—A plan is under consideration at the war department to create an army division of the Philippines and divide the division into departments on a basis similar to that in Cuba. The idea is to create four departments in the Philippines, at least three of them to be commanded by major-generals. The plan is to give each department command of all the troops that can be successfully operated and also insure sufficient garrisons for all points taken. Protection to the peaceable tribes is one of the chief objects sought, as representations made to the war department indicate that many of the inhabitants do not want to fight, and if unmolested and relieved from fear of attack by the rebels, will assist in supporting the authority of the United States and make it impossible for the followers of Aguinaldo to subsist.

Have Sailed for the Cape.

Bombay, Sept. 23.—The remainder of the Nineteenth Hussars and the cavalry staff have sailed for the Cape. The cost of transporting the Indian contingent to South Africa is estimated at £400,000.

Plans Sold to France.

Berlin, Sept. 25.—It is officially admitted that army mobilization plans stolen by Sergt. Schlosser in Wuerzburg, Bavaria, have been sold to France. Schlosser is a fugitive from justice.

the admiral and he ducked his head. Then he glanced at Dewey. The latter did not say anything, but the corners of his mouth were twitching. Farragut was silent for several seconds, then, clearing his throat, he said: "Why, sir, you can't help it, sir; it's human nature."

Dewey was soon assigned to one of Subsequent ill health compelled him to seek shore duty in the navy department at Washington, where he held important posts up to 1897. Trouble with Spain was then regarded as a remote possibility and there was a demand among naval officers for assignments in the European and Atlantic squadrons, the theory being that in May 10—By order of the secretary of the navy Commodore George Dewey was advanced to the rank of rear admiral, and on May 10 he hoisted the rear admiral's flag at the Olympia's main.

May 11 to Aug. 13—May 11 until Aug. 13 the command of Admiral Dewey lay at anchor in the harbor of

Is the Incident Closed?

"The incident is closed," complacently says General de Gallifet, the minister of war, in an address to the corps commanders of the French army in reference to the release of Captain Dreyfus. No doubt the military arm of the French republic would be glad to thus end further consideration of the case which has attracted such world wide attention and relieve itself of further responsibility for what the world generally believes to have been the most flagrant piece of judicial and military injustice in recent history.

The pardon of Captain Dreyfus, while an act of high expediency on the part of the civil authorities of France, cannot, at least outside of France, be regarded as an act of complete justice, nor does the exercise of executive clemency in any degree lessen the responsibility of the two courts martial which adjudged the prisoner guilty if he is innocent.

The action of President Loubet and his cabinet in pardoning Dreyfus is practically and logically a plain condemnation of the whole course of the military authorities in the case, and the presumption is fair that the former believe him guiltless of treasonable conduct. If he were guilty of the high crime of which the courts martial declared him to be guilty, there was every reason why the punishment should have been even greater than it has been and no reason whatever why he should be restored to liberty. If, on the other hand, Dreyfus was innocent, then the action of the first court martial, and in a still greater degree the second, was outrageous. The pardon stamps the two courts as guilty of crimes more odious than was charged against Dreyfus.

The pardon of Dreyfus puts him in a position to pursue his rehabilitation by legal methods. It takes his case out of the military courts and leaves him to carry it before the civil courts whenever he thinks that he has the "new facts" that the interposition of the court of cassation requires. Above all, it relieves France of the odium of refusing even liberty to a victim of the evident injustice of its military system. It substantially removes the cause for that strained state of foreign opinion that threatened serious consequences for the country.

The "incident," however, cannot be regarded as "closed" until Dreyfus is restored to his rank in the army.

Justice Charles P. Daly of New York, who died a few days ago at his summer home at Sag Harbor, on Long Island, while an eminent jurist, was perhaps more widely known as a geographer. As the president of the American Geographical society his death will be noted the world over. No American geographer or scientist was held in higher esteem, both at home and abroad, than the honored and retired jurist who had been so long head of the oldest and most important of American geographical societies. Judge Daly's deep interest in geographical progress has been of the greatest encouragement not only to workers of his own nation, but to Stanley in Africa, to Nansen and Jackson in the arctic, Sven Hedin in Asia and wherever an honest, adventurous spirit pushed into the unknown, advancing the domain of science and of discovery. His many years gave Judge Daly a fund of reminiscence and of personal acquaintance of the greatest value, and from it he drew inspiration and encouragement for the younger men who are now taking up the unfinished work of exploration.

Michigan appears to be working vigorously to make a name for itself as the home of celebrities. The town of Three Oaks recently invited Admiral Dewey to visit it, assuring him that he would be welcome to stay as long as he desired. Not to be outdone by Three Oaks, the enterprising town of Otsego has sent a dispatch to Captain Dreyfus inviting him to make his home there. Now let Blue Earth extend its hospitalities to Oom Paul and Sheboygan send a cordial invitation to Aginaldo; and Michigan will take rank as the habitation of notables.

Impetus to Shipbuilding.

One of the most noticeable results of our war with Spain has been the revival of American shipping and shipbuilding industries. This was predicted before the war was fairly begun, and the Blue Book on American Shipping For 1899, just issued, shows that this prediction has been more than fulfilled. As a matter of course, the war itself made a large demand for vessels of all kinds, from dispatch boats to armored cruisers, and the shipbuilding yards of the country were kept extremely busy with government contracts aside from the large amount of other work on hand and in prospect. This activity in the shipyards continues.

More than 50 war vessels for the United States and foreign countries are now in course of construction in our shipyards, with a value estimated at $40,000,000, exclusive of armor and armament, and more than 200 merchant vessels of large size, valued at $30,000,000. More than $6,000,000 will be invested this year in new shipyards on the Atlantic coast and in improvements to those already established. The yards on the Pacific coast will build as many vessels this year as in any three years heretofore, and the shipbuilders on the lakes have vessels under way valued at $3,000,000. Even New England is busy building wooden vessels of great tonnage, and scores of steam yachts for pleasure are under construction.

This condition of things is gratifying, as it indicates a healthful and permanent improvement in the general business interests of the country. The growth and prosperity of our shipping trade mean growth and prosperity in every industry on land as well as on sea. It has been our reproach for many years that America has not had its proper share of the carrying trade on the seas. While our exports have been going to many lands in ever increasing volume, they have been carried mainly in foreign ships.

We have all the necessary material for building the best ships in the world and the most skilled and competent shipbuilders, as well as the men to equip the ships. There is no reason why American products should not be distributed to the world in American bottoms and under the protection of the American flag. Instead of being one of the least of the ship owning nations of the world, we ought to lead all the nations.

The United States has in one particular somewhat more interest in the rebellion now in progress in Venezuela than it has had in any which has occurred in the Latin-American states in the past quarter of a century. It was in behalf of Venezuela that the United States made its last declaration on the Monroe doctrine, which resulted in the reference to arbitration of the long standing territorial controversy between that country and Great Britain. Of course the revolution—should this rebellion, as now seems probable, prove to be a revolution—has nothing to do with the merits of the case in which our good offices were extended, nor does the interest of the United States in the matter in question extend beyond the granting of justice. Naturally this country would be pleased to see Venezuela's contention sustained, because, primarily, in so far as the merits of the case are understood here, our people believe the Venezuelans have the right side of the controversy. Their contention seems to be just. But outside of this dispute with Great Britain over the boundary line the United States feels an interest in Venezuela and desires for the republic internal peace and national prosperity.

It is announced that Edward Tuck, an alumnus of Dartmouth college, has made that institution a gift of $500,000 as a memorial to his father, who was a staunch friend of the institution and formerly one of its trustees. The method of the gift is as wise as its amount is generous. The income is to be devoted exclusively to instruction—that is, to the primary and essential purpose of the college. Any institution that is strong in this direction will surely find that whatever else is needed will be added into it.

At an exhibition in Toronto recently an attempt was made to pump milk into some cows in order to make them appear unusually productive. The experiment was a total failure and resulted fatally to the cows. There is nothing so reliable for increasing the milk supply as the old fashioned well pump or the new fashioned hydrant.

Now that President Loubet has pardoned Dreyfus, who will pardon France?

He is a young man of sterling ability which will no doubt bring him success.

A runaway on Mill street last Saturday afternoon created a little excitement, but no one was hurt and the damage was slight. The animal was the property of Harry Ford, who had hitched him in S. A. Ford's barn while transacting business in town. The horse succeeded in breaking the tie-strap, backed out of the barn and started down the street at a lively pace, and despite the entreaties of the on-lookers kept up his gait until he reached the mill. There he turned sharply, wheeled into J. S. Spencer's barn, where he was easily caught. Only one strap was broke on the harness and the buggy was as sound as before.

He was only 16 years old and was known here as Paul Smith. He was traced by a letter from the chief of police, Chicago, to the Cary village marshal inquiring after the boy.

Take up the printer's burden
 And pay the debt you owe.
 And when your mortal remnant
 Has left this world behind;
 Your friends can read your title,
 To mansions in the skies.
 The printer knows 'tis charity
 To white-wash all your lies.
 Take up the printer's burden
 And make things what they seem
 When off in silence sleeping,
 The people (in his dream)
 Pay cash for every item,
 Subscriptions in advance,
 And goes to church on Sunday
 Without patches on his pants.
 Take up the printer's burden,
 All who are in arrears
 For his generations yet unborn:
 Will bless you all the years,
 Times now are getting better
 Since McKinley won the day,
 And you ought to pay the printer
 'Cause the 'devil' wants his pay.

 Wealthy Samuel De Voe, who lives in Spotswood, N. J., has taken a new method to guard against the loss of his wealth. LOVE AND LAW

By the author of BONNY'S LOVERS

"Nona, my dear child, are you there? The lamp is very dim, is it not? I don't see you," called the sleepy voice of Mrs. Heathcote, waking me from a rapturous dream of wonderment and joy. And at the same moment the Rector entered, full of apologies for his long absence.

"I couldn't get away," he explained, with quite unnecessary elaboration. "These poor things like to talk out all their troubles, and they are very long-winded. You can't cut them short—to do that would be to ruin your reputation for sympathy. Nona, my dear, let us have some tea, if you please. I am afraid it is the Dean's tea—full of pernicious tannin by this time. It is a quarter to ten o'clock"—taking out his watch. "Why"—staring round him in bewilderment—"what has become of the child? I could declare I saw her sitting there in her black gown when I came in. What queer trick have my eyes played me now?"

"Miss Branscombe has just left the room," I said, coming to the front; "and, Mrs. Heathcote—Mr. Heathcote—will you both give me your good wishes. I—we—I—that is—Miss Branscombe—Nona—"

The Rector was staring at me open-mouthed as I floundered awkwardly through my speech. Mrs. Heathcote's womanly instincts were quicker. I saw it in her face, and, crossing over to her side, took her hand in mine.

"She has made me the happiest fellow in the world," I said. "Won't you congratulate me?"

"You—you?" exclaimed the Rector, red in the face with astonishment, as the truth flashed upon him. "The Dickens; I thought it was that scamp Charlie!"

"So did I," I could not help saying; and then we all laughed heartily together.

Miss Elmslie came in in the midst of our mirth. Mr. Heathcote hastened to explain.

"My dear Miss Elmslie, have you been as blind as the rest of us? Here has Fort been making his running

"It's the groom, sir. He wants to see you about a letter he found in the dog-cart, he says."

"Oh, yes—all right! Where is he?" I remembered then that I had never read the letter; it had passed completely out of my mind since thrusting it into my pocket before my explanation with Nona.

"He is waiting in the study, sir. He said he was sorry to disturb you so late."

"Just so—which is the study?" The girl conducted me to the door. It was open, and "Mr. Tillott" was standing just within, turning his out-of-livery hat round and round in his hands.

"I thought it might be of consequence, sir," he commenced respectfully. Then, as I closed the door on the girl, he came close to me and whispered—"It's all right. I've been over to Colonel Egerton's, and shall have the warrant the first thing in the morning."

"The warrant?" I echoed, aghast.

"Yes; prompt action is the only thing," responded the brisk detective.

"The arrest will be made before ten o'clock."

"Arrest!" Fortunately my back was turned to the light, and Widdrington could not see my scared face. "Surely this is an extreme measure!"

"Extreme?" answered the detective. "It's the only course, if we are to lay hands on the will at all. Afterwards it can be hushed up by the family—refusal to prosecute, and so on. But intimidation is the only line at present, and in the circumstances the will we must have. She doesn't know where it is—of that I am sure. It has not been made way with—criminals seldom do that sort of thing; it shuts the door behind them, you see. We'll put on the thumbscrew, and it will come out, never fear"—with an odious chuckle.

"I sat down, faint and dizzy. There stood the detective, eager, triumphant, and no doubt utterly astonished and whilst we have been watching the other horse?"

"What do you mean?" asked she.

"That I am going to ask you to receive me into the family, Miss Elmslie," I put in. "Nona is willing to be my wife—will you let me be your cousin?"

"Is this true?" she exclaimed in breathless wonder. "Oh, I was never so glad of anything in my life"—clasping her hands. "Receive you? Of course—I will. I must go to the dear child at once."

"It's the most satisfactory way out of all our difficulties," Mr. Heathcote declared, when I had laid my position fully before him. "It has relieved my mind of a great load of anxiety. I could not have borne to see the dear girl married to that other fellow. And now I suppose we must give up Forest Lea. I am sorry about the old place, too. If the will—"

"Let it go," I said, hastily, recalled to the remembrance of all the trouble involved in that unhappy subject.

"Mr. Tillott would like to speak to you, sir," announced a maid, as I crossed the hall, bed-room candlestick in hand.

"Who on earth is Mr. Tillott?" I inquired.

disappointed at my want of appreciation of his success.

"The charge is for concealing," he went on. "I thought it better to take that line."

"I suppose so," I assented dully. I was ransacking my brains for a way of escape. My darling in the clutches of this happy of the law! It was intolerable—impossible! A wild idea of bribing him—of throwing myself upon his mercy, crossed my half-distracted mind. Something must be done.

"I have telegraphed for more men," said Widdrington—"half a dozen of them in case of resistance, you know. They can come down by the night mail."

An army of constables against one poor little trembling woman! What on earth was the man thinking of?

"He'll probably show fight," went on the detective.

"He? Who?" I stammered.

"Why, the criminal!" answered Widdrington.

"The—the criminal!" I repeated after him blankly.

The man gave me a quick critical look. That I had been dining, and dining not wisely, but too well, was evidently the conclusion he arrived at. Nothing else could account for my intense stupidity.

"The criminal—Mr. Charles Branscombe," he emphasized. "It's a clear case, and an uncommon clever game, too. Personation of his cousin, Miss Branscombe—wonderful likeness at all times—fair hair, slight figure—like a girl's—no hair on face—no wonder you were taken in"—meaningly. "Lady's maid in the plot, supplied all the rig-out, etc., and gave the tip into the bargain. Uncommonly well managed. Astonishing how the young fellow gets over the women—they're all ready to go down on their knees and to sell their souls for him—every one of them. As for this one—"

"Woodward?" I ejaculated, beginning to recover from my stupefaction, and to see daylight through the whole thing.

"Yes," returned the ex-groom, with a wink. "Young woman soft on the sex generally, you see—didn't want much courting to let the whole eat out of the bag—as much as she knew. Knows nothing about the will; she believed Mr. Branscombe only wanted to look at it, she says. He told her so, and she thought it hard lines that he was not allowed to go to the house or to be at his uncle's funeral. She never supposed that he wanted to get hold of the will altogether. And now what we've got to do is to make him hand it over. But"—breaking off in his rapid explanation—"I told you all this in the letter I gave you this evening. Didn't you read it? Bless my soul! You haven't dropped it?"—as I rummaged fruitlessly in one pocket after another. "You haven't lost it?"

"It's not here! No, I did not read it. Stay—I may have left it in the drawing-room; wait here whilst I see, I will be back directly."

Mrs. Heathcote and Miss Elmslie had not yet retired. Lights were full on in the drawing-room, contrary to the virtuous early habits of the household, and the two ladies were seated side by side on a couch by the fire, discussing over and over again the wonderful surprise of the evening.

"What is it?" asked Mrs. Heathcote, rising to assist my search. "A letter? No, there is no letter here. Eliza must have seen it if it had been left on the tea-table, and she never takes letters or papers away—the Rector has trained her too well for that. No, it is certainly not here. I hope it was not important. But you will be sure to find it upstairs or in the study. Have you looked there?"

Widdrington was awaiting me impatiently when I returned.

"It is gone," I admitted ruefully. "I came straight from the garden to the drawing-room, and from there here. I must have dropped it."

"Then the whole thing's blown—ruined," cried the man, clapping on his hat, and making for the door. "There's not a minute to be lost."

My letter was gone—there was no doubt about it. A second and calmer search through my pockets confirmed the fact. I had entirely forgotten the paper, attaching no importance to it at the moment, regarding it as simply a ruse on the detective's part to attract my attention; and subsequent events had entirely driven the whole circumstance out of my mind. I had doubtless dropped the missive—with all its important revelation—in the garden or hall.

I opened the window of my bedroom, which looked over the lawn and garden path by which I had returned to the house. A man's figure—Widdrington's—was just vanishing through the gate. He had evidently been searching over the ground, so that no efforts of mine were needed. I wondered what success he had had. Probably he found the missing letter, and all fear of miscarriage to his plans was over.

I sat up late into the night, writing and reading. Sleep, in the tumult of my mind, was out of the question. I had to think over and realize the wonderful and blissful change which had come into my life. Nona, my peerless treasure, was mine—my own. And the cloud which had overshadowed her—even in my most loyal thought—had dimmed the rapturous joy of my betrothal.

I had almost forgotten Widdrington in the floodtide of my happiness, but, when I descended to the breakfast-room the next morning, I was abruptly recalled to the subject of last night's interview. On my plate lay a note marked—"Delivered by hand." It contained only these words—

"Gone. Disappeared last night. Letter not found."

Later in the day the detective's intelligence was confirmed by the Rector. Mr. Charles Branscombe had gone from Forest Lea, leaving no address behind him. The two or three female servants remaining in charge either knew or would tell nothing. Charlie had always a fascinating influence on their class and set; as Widdrington had said, there was something of a feudal devotion in their loyalty to him. They no doubt thought his case a hard one, and they would not betray him.

Mr. Heathcote's new groom had also disappeared—summoned to London by the dangerous illness of his father, the household believed.

A WEEK IN ILLINOIS.

RECORD OF HAPPENINGS FOR SEVEN DAYS.

A Great Day at DeKalb—The Northern Normal School Dedicated with Interesting Ceremonies — Spring Valley Officials Indicted.

DeKalb's Great Day.

DeKalb—The Northern Illinois State Normal school, one of the finest buildings for educational uses in the state, was dedicated Friday with interesting ceremonies. Gov. Tanner and other state officials came from Springfield and other large parties arrived from Chicago, Peoria, Elgin and other cities. The exercises took place on the school campus, and were witnessed by fully 5,000 persons. President John W. Cook presided, and the guests were welcomed in an address delivered by Col. J. N. Ellwood. The school trustees present included Judge R. S. Farrand, Dixon; ex-Judge A. A. Goodrich, Chicago; Charles H. Deere, Moline; Alfred Baylis and W. C. Garrard, Springfield. Other prominent guests included a score of noted educators and other public men from different parts of the state. The music was furnished by the Pullman Military band and a chorus of 100 voices. The exercises were preceded by a parade led by mounted G. A. R., followed by hundreds of school children. The state officials and other distinguished guests followed in carriages, and then came a long line of secret societies, labor unions and other organizations.

Get Tips on Road Building.

Ottawa—The good roads convention here, the eleventh of the series being held in the state, was only fairly well attended, but the demonstration of the approved methods of road building on one of the leading highways was watched by 400 people, who also listened to a very interesting address by Gen. E. G. Harrison, the road expert. One of the strong points Gen. Harrison made is that all water on roads is superfluous and should be got rid of as soon as possible. To secure this result the drains must be placed immediately under the roadway and well up to the surface for quick action, filling in on top where possible with loose stones nearly to the dirt roadbed. Miss Rella C. Harber, the promoter of the good roads movement in Illinois and adjoining states, was present and pointed out the necessity of improving the county roads. A permanent La Salle county good roads organization will be effected soon.

Indict Former City Officers.

Princeton—Five Spring Valley men, who, while holding city offices, were alleged to have committed ballot-box frauds, have been indicted by the grand jury here. They are John L. Murphy, formerly city attorney; Frank Powers, formerly city clerk; James Hicks, alderman; Edward Newman, alderman, and William Hawthorn, attorney. Powers is charged with perpetrating a felony by issuing spurious ballots to the judges of election instead of the official ones, and the other four persons, in conjunction with Powers are charged with conspiracy to commit crime. By the use of the spurious tickets an alderman, whose name was left off, was defeated last April, and the present prosecutions are the result.

Fire Damages Chicago Stock Yards.

Chicago telegram: The property loss occasioned by the fire which destroyed the mammoth horse sale stables at the stock yards, two residences, and three detached horse barns, as well as damaging to a great extent the Transit house, Thursday afternoon, is estimated at more than $300,000. Actual figures have not yet been prepared by those interested.

Many persons were injured during the progress of the fire, but their condition is not considered serious.

But for the heroic work of Chief Swenie and the men under his command the flames would have spread to the stock yards proper.

Failure on Chicago Board of Trade.

Chicago telegram: The board of trade commission house of Barrett, Farnum & Co. failed yesterday, and the scalpers and brokers in grain as a result have losses to meet variously estimated at from $100,000 to $150,000. In the direct loss to the local trade the failure is the worst in years. The chances are against its being far-reaching in its effect. It is all traceable to a plunge. The firm has made no statement, but according to all accounts has had an excellent commission business. The failure is attributed to the personal speculations of the senior member of the firm, John F. Barrett.

DeKalb's Great Day.

DeKalb, Ill., telegram: The Northern Illinois State Normal school, one of the finest buildings for educational uses in the state, was dedicated today with interesting ceremonies. Gov. Tanner and other state officials came from Springfield and other large parties arrived from Chicago, Peoria, Elgin and other cities. The exercises took place on the school campus and were witnessed by fully 5,000 persons.

FIFTY CENTS FOR NOTHING.

What will the inventive brain of man do next? This is a question some one asks almost daily. There is one, though, who leads all others, who for a quarter of a century has been making fine laundry starch, and to-day is offering the public the finest starch ever placed on the market.

Ask your grocer for a coupon book which will enable you to get the first two packages of this new starch, "RED CROSS" (trade mark brand), also two children's Shakespeare pictures, painted in twelve beautiful colors, natural as life, or the Twentieth Century Girl Calendar, all absolutely free. All grocers are authorized to give ten large packages of "RED CROSS STARCH" with twenty of the Shakespeare pictures of ten of the Twentieth Century Girl Calendars to the first five purchasers of the "ENDLESS CHAIN STARCH BOOK." This is one of the greatest offers ever made to introduce "RED CROSS" laundry starch, J. C. Hubinger's latest invention.

Plenty of Time.

Years ago Joaquin Miller, journeying on foot, was overtaken by a countryman, who took him on his wagon and gave him a long ride. Tired, at length, of conversation, the poet took a novel from his pocket and pored over it long and silently. "What are you reading?" said the countryman. "A novel of Bret Hart's," said Mr. Miller. "Well, now, I don't see how an immortal being wants to be wasting his time with such stuff." "Are you quite sure," said the poet, "that I am an immortal being?" "Of course you are." "If that be the case," responded Miller, "I don't see why I should be so very economical of my time."

A MAMMOTH INSTITUTION.

To those who are accustomed to sending away from home for their goods it is of the greatest importance to know the character and reliability of the establishments selling goods to families from catalogues. The great emporium of the John M. Smyth Co., located at 150 to 166 West Madison street, Chicago, has been established for a third of a century, and has furnished over a half a million homes in Chicago and vicinity alone. This firm enjoys the confidence of the public by its many years of fair dealing. It issues an immense illustrated catalogue that should be in every family, as it describes and gives the price of every article required for household use. A sample of the extraordinary values offered by this firm is shown in the illustration of the lady's ulster in another column of this paper. These garments are indeed wonderful values, and yet they are but a sample of the thousand and one useful articles illustrated and described in the beautiful catalogue of the John M. Smyth Company.

ILLINOIS IS IN LINE.

Will Lead Every Other State Except Missouri at World's Fair.

Gov. Tanner and his administration is taking great interest in the world's fair to be held at St. Louis in 1903. In reply to a letter from the editor of a St. Louis paper the governor has this to say:

"... while no part of Illinois is a part of the Louisiana purchase, Illinois contiguity to and its commercial and social relations so interwoven with the people of that vast and fertile territory that we are perhaps as much interested in the prospective world's fair, to be held in St. Louis, as those living within the confines of the Louisiana purchase, and you can rely upon it that the people of Illinois will contribute more loyally to the success of the fair than any other state outside of Missouri.

Personally and officially, while I am in office, I will do everything in my power to assist in making it a success. Yours very truly,

THE ills of women overshadow their whole lives. Some women are constantly getting medical treatment and are never well. "A woman best understands women's ills," and the women who consult Mrs. Pinkham find in her counsel practical assistance. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

MRS. MABEL GOOD, Correctionville, Ia., tells how Mrs. Pinkham saved her life. She says:

"I cannot thank you enough for what your medicine has done for me. I can recommend it as one of the best medicines on earth for all women's ills. I suffered for two years with female weakness and at last became bedfast. Three of our best doctors did me no good so I concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking a few bottles of your medicine, I was able to do all my housework. I know that your medicine raised me from a bed of sickness and perhaps death, and am very thankful for what it has done for me. I hope that every suffering woman may be persuaded to try your medicine." Get Mrs. Pinkham's advice as soon as you begin to be puzzled. The sick headaches and dragging sensation come from a curable cause. Write for help as soon as they appear.

MRS. DOLE STANLEY, Cambridgeburg, Ind., writes: "DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—I was troubled with sick headache and was so weak and nervous, I could hardly go. A friend called upon me one evening and recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, saying that she knew that it would cure me. I then sent for your medicine and after taking five bottles of it, I was entirely cured. I cannot praise it enough."

H. A. SANDMAN SUICIDES

Village Marshal Found Dying Saturday Night.

REVOLVER BY HIS SIDE.

Inquest Held Last Sunday—Jury will not Return Verdict Until Tomorrow.

Our citizens were shocked last Saturday evening on hearing that our village marshal, Henry Sandman, had committed suicide. Excitement ran high and all kinds of stories and rumors were in circulation. He had been marshal of the village for several years past and had made a good officer. His motive for committing the deed is not known, as he apparently had no reason whatever, although he had been despondent for some time and it is believed by many while in one of his gloomy moods he fired the shot, which proved so disastrously to himself, without any hesitation or reflection.

About 9:30 that evening Henry Schroeder was walking along Williams street and heard the shot fired which ended Sandman's life. He hurried to the scene of the tragedy, which was at the corner of Chestnut and Williams streets, and with the aid of matches was able to recognize the body as that of the marshal. He was lying on his back with his feet on the sidewalk with a large bullet hole in the side of his head. His revolver was found beside him with one chamber empty, which told the story. Mr. Schroeder gave an alarm and within a few minutes several reached the scene. Doctors Kendall and Richardson were notified, but before they arrived life was extinct.

The body was removed to the undertaking rooms of E. M. Blocks' and Coroner Knight was notified at once.

Sunday afternoon the coroner arrived and an inquest into the mystery was begun.

The jury was composed of George H. Comstock, G. Heimerdinger, F. H. Plagge, Wm. Peters, Henry Rieck and John Rieke.

Dr. D. H. Richardson, who was summoned on the case, testified at the inquest. He said that two men rushed to him about half past nine Saturday night and one, Wm. Peters, cried: "Sandman is gone. He is lying dead over there by the shed." This shed is known as Spinner's shed and it is built close to the sidewalk. The street there is quite dark. Dr. Richardson said that the bullet hole was in the right and back side of the head. A strange fact was that the right eye was swollen shut as though it had been hit, but this may have been caused by the bullet. The body lay in a pool of blood 5 or 6 feet in diameter.

Henry T. Schroeder heard the shot when about a block and a-half away from the scene. He hurried near and as he approached he heard groaning noises, but he noticed nothing until he nearly stumbled over Sandman's prostrated body. Schroeder said he saw a man across the street going north, but he was not running. Nothing could be learned as to who this man was.

Dr. C. H. Kendall testified that the gun must have been fired at close range because the head was powder burned. Dr. Richardson also admitted that fact.

The inquest was not completed, but was adjourned until tomorrow.

Henry A. Sandman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. P. Sandman, was born near Barrington, February 26, 1860 and died September 23, 1899, aged 39 years, 6 months and 27 days. He made his home in this immediate vicinity all his life. The funeral took place from his late residence on Ela street Thursday afternoon at 1 o'clock, Rev. Menzel of St. Paul's Evangelical church, officiating. Besides his aged parents, he leaves three brothers and two sisters to mourn his loss. Interment took place in the Lutheran cemetery.

A WONDERFUL CURE OF DIARRHOEA.

A WELL KNOWN VIRGINIA EDITOR Had Almost Given Up, but Was Brought Back to Perfect Health by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

From the Times, Hillsville, Va.

I suffered with diarrhoea for a long time and thought I was past being cured. I had spent much time and money and suffered so much misery that I had almost decided to give up all hopes of recovery and await the result, but noticing the advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and also some testimonials stating how some wonderful cures had been wrought by this remedy, I decided to try it. After taking a few doses I was entirely well of that trouble, and I wish to say further to my readers and fellow-sufferers that I am a hale and hearty man to-day and feel as well as I ever did in my life.—O. R. MOORE. This remedy is for sale by A. L. Waller, Barrington, and A. S. Olms, Palatine.

LABORS HERE ENDED.

Rev. T. E. Ream Completes His Fifth Year's Work.

Tomorrow evening Rev. T. E. Ream will preach his last sermon as pastor of the M. E. church in Barrington. He has been pastor of the church for a full term of five years, and by a law of the church will move from here to take up his christian work in a new field. The Rock River Conference, which meets in the city of Rockford on October 4, of which Mr. Ream has been a member since 1892, will arrange for his future church and field of labor.

Mr. Ream is a young man of scholarly traits, and ability as a public speaker. He was born in Hampshire, Ill., on the 8th of March, 1866, and his life work. He studied in the various departments of the university for seven consecutive years and worked his way through from the beginning to the end.

In October, 1894, he was appointed by the Conference to take charge of the M. E. church at Barrington, it being his first appointment after leaving college.

On the 7th of November, 1894, he was united in marriage to Miss Cora Whitford Collins, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. P. Collins of South Elgin, Ill., and soon afterwards Mr. and Mrs. Ream came to Barrington.

During the five years that he has served the church here, much has been accomplished. A beautiful new early education was received in the Hampshire High school. In 1885 he graduated from the business college of Jenning Seminary at Aurora, Ill. He then returned to his home, entered into business and commenced the study of law by himself, fully intending to practice law and enter a political life. But, as Mr. Ream has often remarked, "God had other things for him to do." Feeling that he was called to preach the gospel of Christ and his duty was plain before him, after remaining in business for two years at Hampshire, he left his home and entered the North-western University at Evanston to prepare for his parsonage has been built and the church repaired both within and without. There is no debt upon the church property and everything is in good condition for his successor. The membership of the church has more than doubled, as well as the Sunday school.

Many regrets are expressed as Mr. Ream leaves this community. Not only his own church members, but the entire community as well feel that he has been an earnest christian worker, a patriotic citizen and a public-spirited man in their midst.

All join in wishing him and his beloved wife Godspeed in their new field of labor.
