The republican form of government has proved itself vital and practical. The seeds of democracy have been sown in every nation of the world. Those seeds have germinated, are

The seeds of semocracy have occurs away in every nation of the world. Those seeds have germinated, are growing.

The mental and moral poverty of most of the kingly tribe furnishes a horrible example that is vastly alding the spread of republican sentiment.

The spectacle furnished by the bereditary rulers supplies a more powerful argument for the democratic ideal argument for the democratic ideal argument for the democratic look at the could be written on the subject. Look at them—In most classed, lot of medicore degenerates who are poissoning the moral atmosphere of the world! Prollipsts, kile, semunathers blood depicted by interest the world! Prollipsts, kile, semunathers blood depicted by interest the world! William of Germany is probably the secretary of the service of the world! William of Germany is probably the trongest of the lot. He has escaped in the whole list. William of Germany is probably the transpect of the lot. He has escaped in the whole list. William of Germany is probably the strongest of the lot. He has escaped in moral thin that disgraces most of them. He can boast of intellectual stainments, busp his strength to pose as a universal gratis has made him leavaging stock of thinking men and women everywhere. He really believes a universal gratis has made him he leavaging stock of thinking men and women everywhere. He really believes he is endowed with the divine right to rule, and his attempts to pisy in that high and mighty voice are often hold-cross, sometimes even painting. His specticular and sensational exhibits of egotiam are not particularly harraful, he is probably the least objectionable of any of the monarches of the greater matous. But granting this, is be such a man as a free and great people would woluntarily closee to rule over them?

Do they not furnish an eierating spectacle?
Compare this precious company with real men like the presidents of France and of America. These men have won their way from the ranks by the sheer force of character and shillity.
They are a shining testimonial to the rule of the people.
In this day, when our toad eaters are bowing down to foreign kings, when there is a secret desire among a few simpletons for the "stronger" government of a monarchy, it is well to call attention to these things.
The republics of the world will grow more and more democratic, and those peoples unfortunate equegit to have ever them effete royal relies of an outgrown system will arise in the name of
