Overproduction of Princes.

Either there are too many prince in the world or too few princesses. Anyway, there is trouble in getting the princes married off. For example, the German emperor has six sons, three of whom are of marriageable age and one of whom, the crown prince, it seems very destrable to get into matrimonial harness as soon as soonless for the anniable here. or whom, the coven prince, it seems very desirable to get into matrimonial harness as soon as possible, for the amilable beir to the German throus seems to have a peachant for failing in love with some girl beneath his rank once each fortnight. Kaiser Wilhelm has enough to do in looking after the affairs of the entire universe without this additional burden. So it is his wish that his too impressionable clickst son should get field up as soon as may be, so that the crown princess can see that there are no further plebelan entant the plebelan entant entant they are willing to renounce in favor of the state religion of Prussia. Then the kniser is not popular as a possible fether-in-law. As everybody knows, he likes his own way even better than the redilinary king (and no one could think of calling bim ordinary in any respect), and he is apt to insist that his way shall be the way of those with whom he comes in contact.

Besides this the princesses of Europe have lately developed a liking for independence that is alarming to an autocrat. Royal ladies nowadays secure divorces, fall in love with commoners and even elope, as do ther! tess or more fortunate sisters. Hence she who is chosen as a bride for one of the six Frussias princes must not only be beyond any suspicion of independence herself; but she must have no sister, as then the risk of sexuals would be doubled.

bled. If may be that the difficulty in and ling a partner is the reason that the coven prince is to take a trip recomb the world. In the first place, it would keep him out of mischief, in ond place, it would give him an opportunity to look around and set interest and in some difficulty to look around and set interest and in somebody besides thorus giris.

Every farmer knows that some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same and seed may seem the same but some plants are weak and others strong.

And that's the way with children. They are like young plants. Same food, same home, same care but some grow big and strong while others stay small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion offers an easy way out of the difficulty. Child weakness often means starvation, not because of lack of food, but because the food does not feed.

Scott's Emulsion really feeds and gives the child growing strength.

Whatever the cause of weakness and failure to grow
