Social Problems In Japan.

While the world in general notes with growing admiration the political and material achievements of the Japs, wide awake students of events who have first hand knowledge of that wonderful people are looking at the problems which lie beneath the surface in the mikado's realm. Among those who view the modernizing of Japan with mingled feelings of admiration and misgiving is Mr. Henry Dyer, an Englishman, who was principal of the Imperial College of Engineering at Tokyo from 1872 to 1882. In a recent work Mr. Dyer discusses at length certain social questions which confront the Japanese. He says:

"Large fortunes (uncompensated) are being accumulated at one end of the scale, while the other end, poverty, is appearing at the other, and as yet no effective means have been devised either to relieve the poverty or to restrain the wealth. The result is anxiety, strain, worry and anxiety, even among the well to do classes, make not a few of them turn to drink. There is a great interest on the conditions which exist in the days of their youth. There can be no doubt that the Japanese are becoming as decadent as in England and in other countries. The economic position of the agricultural class is not good, and it is not to any great extent. Modern industrial conditions threaten to take away the joy of existence in Japan and the Japanese are compelled to depend on the employment of women and children in factories of all kinds. In which case, the condition of the country is almost lamentable. The problems of the relations of capital and labor are also very serious, and the industrial conditions which are certain to attract most attention."

Mr. Dyer's role in the book quoted, "Das Nippon," is that of a friendly critic. He affirms emphatically the wish that the Japanese continue to live their own lives in their own way and to adopt only those western methods which will enable them to retain their eastern ideals. In their struggle for the means of life he would have them remember that the ends of their national life must be "the highest welfare of the great body of the people."

Lagrands on the World's Stage. Read again the thesis of Dr. William Osler, arguing that a man is "practically useless after forty," is a pointer for young men to be up and doing. The notion that there is lots of time in which to achieve wrecks many a promising life. If, as the doctor says, "the sum of human achievements in action, in science, in art, in literature," worth noting stands to the credit of men under forty surely the youngsters who nurse ambitions about leaving "footprints on the sands of time" are the ones to take warning.

On the other hand, the discounted veterans may rest content to leave the world's work to boys conscious that their own prospects of individual fame and its rewards are good. Every day men who have passed the Scripture limit are doing things and dying rich in honors won in old age. The late Jay Cooke and Lew Wallace are notable examples, and no one will contend that Joe Jefferson "lagged superfluous" after forty.

Among the achievements after the age of forty whose authors can afford to snap their fingers at the opinion of any particular age or clique are Lowell's "Essay on the Human Understanding," "The Tempest," "Leor," "Paradise Lost," "Faust," "Wealth of Nations," "Virginia's Progress," "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," Webster's Dictionary, Johnson's Dictionary, discovery of the law of gravitation, discovery of electricity, discovery of America, discovery of the circulation of the blood, Yorktown, Waterloo, Sedan, Appomattox, and the Roman conquest of the known world.

More purely personal perhaps were the achievements of Fulton, who sailed the first steamboat at the age of forty-two; Wesley, who founded the Methodist church at forty-one; Macaulay, who wrote his history of England at forty-eight; Michael Angelo, who built the great dome of St. Peter's after sixty; Beethoven, who wrote his famous "Mass in D" at fifty-four; Galileo, who was only in the midst of his discoveries at sixty; Handel, who composed the "Messiah" at fifty-seven, and Haydn, who composed "The Creation" at sixty-six. As a rule, veterans are delighted when they can escape the "quiddling crowd," and they miss the weight far less than the world misses them.

Efficiency of Torpedo Boats.

Japanese naval authorities have ordered twenty-five additional torpedo boat destroyers for the fleet. Having had the latest experience, and a valuable one, too, with all manner of auxiliary vessels, the Japs ought to know what they are doing. Japan already has about 300 torpedo boats and torpedo boat destroyers, while the United States has but fifty-one vessels of this class.

The French have always had great faith in torpedo craft. They were experimenting during the American civil war and have kept ahead of the times by constructing new models.

France leads all other nations in the number of torpedo vessels. She has 280 torpedo boats and destroyers. Her torpedo boats proper outnumber those of Germany, Great Britain and the United States combined. The Japanese sailors are not wanting in the courage and skill necessary to make torpedo work effectively. They have given the system a trial and have faith in it to the extent of increasing the number of their torpedo craft 25 per cent. And they are not investing money in experiments at present.

A remarkable connection between the autumn rainfall and the wheat yield has been noted by the British meteorological council. "With certain exceptions," says a recent report by the secretary, "every inch of autumn rainfall involves a diminution of the yield of wheat for the following year by a bushel and a quarter per acre." Autumn is that period from the thirty-sixth to the forty-eighth week of the year, approximately the months of September, October and November.

The report under consideration covers the "principal wheat producing districts" of the United Kingdom. The autumn of 1898 was unusually dry in these districts, and the farmer will have a chance to verify the conclusions of the council the coming season.

The whole world's production of coffee last year amounted to over 2,000,000,000 pounds, nearly one-half of which was consumed by the United States. Other peoples, notably the Germans and French, have always considered the most confirmed coffee drinkers, but although they indulge two and three times a day, the quantity drunk is small in comparison with what Americans drink, who make it their principal beverage at dinner, as well as breakfast. The art of making coffee has improved in this country with the adoption of foreign methods.
