Another Pest in Australia.

Victoria is the largest fruit-producing state in Australia. About ten years ago a few pairs of English starlings were introduced, with the expectation that they would help to keep down the insects that infest fruit trees. The birds have raised five broods a year and the few pairs have tow become myriads. The laws passed for their protection have been repealed and apparently fulle efforts are being made to exterminate them, for they have become the worst enemy of the Australian fruit industry. All kinds of fruits, from the grape and have become their favorite food, and they save the farmers the trouble of batvesting. Brought in as a blessing, they are now a post.
