"I want you to talle this can. It represents King George's coupter in America-do you understand? queen charalotte's empire in America-do you warren begins to move the feelings of the people, throw it at tim."

He put the eag into the bunds of the boy and said to the offer:
"That shall be our signal."
When Warren arrived at the Old South church in the black robes of the carter the yard and church were so growded that he could not enter by the 20ort. A ladder was set for him on the outside. The people were greatly surprised to see his form in his black our prized to see his form in his black our prized to see his form in his black our cortest robes rise before the great win-

He entered through the window, which may still be seen, and begin his oration under the sounding board of the public, which still remains of the means of the seed of the seed of the public window. He swayed the hearts of the people. A British officer held up before him some butlets in his band, and Warren dropped over them his white handkerchief, an act which a schoolboy might have repeated while reciting Warren's great oration. The British officers awatted the signal. The boy was there trembling. In an oithburst of eloquence the people pressed forward and almost crushed each other.

boy was there trembling. In an outs-burst of sloquence the people pressed forward and almost crushed each other.

The trembling boy to whom was in-trusted the fate of King George's em-pire and Queen Charlotte's empire felt a sudden colones in his feverish hands. His fingers were dripping. King George's empire was gone-Queen Charlotte's.

His face wrinkied and he disappear-ed, how and when we do not know.

What would have been the political history of the American nation had that egg been thrown?
