The banker hesitated; Larg notised it. "You are oversteeping your boundst" he exclaimed. "And I shall sue you for any damage that may result from my not getting this money when I need tit!"

"You can go any time you want to," added the president harnhy, "I am not detaining you, and you should thank your lucky stars that I am so leniest with you."

"Very well," and Lang, a heavy feeling at his heart, realizing that he had lost his game "You mean that you are not willing to run the risk of arreating me? However we'll let that go. Give me the check."

"We cannot do that," said the bank.

you are not willing to run the risk of arresting me? However will let that go, Give me the check."

"We cannot do that," said the banker decledely.

"By what right do you presume to keep both the draft and the money? You go too far. If you retain the draft, what evidence have I that you will not swar that I have received the money? You-have no right to expect me to trust you, If you do not trust me, and you must either arrest me as a forger or pay me the money."

"We are recognized as responsible agents," responded the banker, attempting to appease Lang. "And have a right to protect ourselves as well as he will be to the result of the cash first the money.

Than been my observation that the farm of the property of the complete array of fruit-bearing it is complete array of fruit-bearing it is complete array of fruit-bearing it is complete at the farm that sells at a framery price in the market. The ordinary mortal, if he has the money with which to purchase a farm, will pay a good deal more for one on which are not only the property of the money value of a well-ordered farm is out of all proportion to the money that has been put into it. As an illustration of this I have in mind a little place on the edge of a neighboring village. A man had to a to the property of the property of the property of the property of a sughboring village. A man had a set them out. He did nothing more, except live on the place for a few years and incidentally take care of the trees and shruba. Persimmons in Chine.

The persimmon is highly esteemed in China by natives and by many foreigners. It has the characteristic flavor of the American persimmon, but is less astringent. It grows to good size and keeps well. Near Peking the most popular sorts of persimmons have rings or grooves near the steems, which give them the appearance of having had strings tied around them when small and of having grown around the strings. The work of the southern and central productions in the southern and central productions are picked green by the native ripened in line. Thus ripened they have a firmness of flesh that is much esteemed.—United States Consul Anderson at Hangchau, China
