Coquelin Quick of Thought.

Coquelin, the great French consolina, has had occasion for speeches that were not set down for him in his part.

In one play, the usual Parisian farce,
he was expected to find a man's scarf pin clingting to his wire's aboulder, but the actress forgot to adjust the pin before appearing on the scene. Coquelin was not dismayed. He pointed to some outrich plumes with which her town was trimmed and gave her the tows to that the play could proceed.

Ned and his grandinother are the best of friends, but sometimes the little boy's tongue is too quick to please the old lady. Then Ned apologizes, after a fashion of his own, which his grandmother approves.

I got tired lugging that wheelbarrow for grandmother when she was changing her plants. Ned asid to his mother, recounting the day's what her bestime, "and I said, with the bestime, "and I said, with the bestime, the standard of this hateful dirt in all the world!" But then afterward I apologized." "I'm glad of that," said his mother. "Old you tell her you were sorry." "No, that's not the kind s grandmother likes best," said Ned. "I got another wheelbarrow full, and just said, 'Don't you want some more of this nice dirt, grandmother?' and then we very all right again."—Youth's Companion.

Avoiding Potate Ret.

It has for many years been a theory of mine that the late blight of potators of the potators of the late blight of potators of the late blight of potators of the late blight of the late blight of the late blight of the late blight one fid was due to the potators from this field and while the potator than the potators from this field note being blight. One field was study while the potators from this field not get around to the late blight. We did not get around the late blight of the late blight blight blight potators from that field and a light cruth had formed one night on the ground. The potators from that field kept well all through the winter. In both cases we picked out all the discolored potators produced in each field before storing them in the ceilar. I have no doubt that have been the late blight portators when it have standard the late blight portators of the late blight portators. When it have been a late blight, I have let the digging go as long as possible. But a man must not let them remain in the ground till the frost hardens the soil for the winter, cleak he will lose his potators—Charles Comstock. Case Co., Mich., in Farmer's Review.

The Cottony Grass Stale.
In some of the eastern states during the past two years the cottony grass scale bas been troublesome, destroying much grass. This is unusual, and the past two years is successed to be considered insignates. From it were considered insignates from the weak present increase in its importance is supposed to be due to a sudden decrease in the number of its parasitic enemies that kept it is check. Just how far weakward it is well to be have no record, but it is well to be to the lookout for it.

The mature female scale lays an immense number of eggs, inclosing them in a small white sack, which is produced at the same time. Sometimes this sack is half an inch in length. When they are fully developed they are easily seen. The remedy of the past of the grass, either in a fall or spring off the grass, either in a fall or spring strength of the well to leave them till spring if the well to leave the spri

Farm Accounts.

One of the greatest obstacles in the way of successful farming is the general lack of farm account books. This science, the science of numbers, is regarded by the farmer as a side issue. He says that a crop will bring in just as much money whether he has keep an account of it or not. This is true, but if a man does keep account of all he does and of the profit and loss on every transaction, he will scon come to know the enterprises that lose money for him and avoid them. A money for him and avoid them. A money for him and avoid them, and avoid them, and avoid them, and and the school of the scho

Day's Work on the Farm.

There is little reason why a day's work on the farm should not be about the same as in any other place. The farm day has become a joke with some people, who claim to have been victims of it when they were young. On some farms only a fair day's work is done, and that is as it should be. On other farms of the day were the day of t

Trap nests are those nests in which the hen lays an egg and then finds herself in a trap, which has been sprung by her own weight when she entered the nest. She must remain in her prison till some one comes to take her out. The attendant reads the number on the hen's leg and records the laying of the egg. The weakness about this plan is that it assumes an attendant present at almost all times of day. The trap nest its very useful at experiment estations where some one is always at hand to help make the trap workable. It is also useful on those poultry farms where one or more persons have to give their time to the care of the poultry. It will not prove useful generally on the farm.

Co-operative Creameries.
Co-operative creameries seem to be largely on the increase and are giving continuous and are giving good satisfaction. The managers have learned how to settle discusses, without wrecking the creameries, and from the time that creameries, and from the time that creameries, and from the time that creameries and from the time that produces of a creaming accommunity that produces enough milk to keep it going.
