Miss Jukes was called to Chicago on account of the illness of her mother. She removed her mother to this city.

The sick lady has improved rapidly since coming here, and is now on the way to recovery.

Dr. F. A. Hardin, of Chicago, who at one time was the Presiding Elder of the Rockford District, will preach both morning and evening on next Sunday in the Methodist church.

Dr. Hardin is most cordially invited to come and here Dr. Hardin.

Pastor Kelly, of the Baptist church on Sunday evening gave the first of a series of "Sunday Evening Talks."

The subject on that evening was "The Woman Who Touched the Hem of His Garments." Mr. Kelly was enthusiastically listened to by a good sized audience.

He brought out the following lesson: Our need; our faith; our action; the result if we act; if we do not act; the application. Which shall it be?

The Short Cut in Print.

Of late the everyday habit which some people have of using initials to express the names of people in the public eye has crept into the English press, probably as a freak of "yellow" Journalism.

It is not very audacious, but it is eccentric to run after day after day the initials C. B. to designate Campbell Bauman and T. P. when Thomas Power O'Connor is meant.

One London newspaper is addressed formally as M. A. P. and quoted as M. A. P. The full name of the publication is M. A. P. The Daily Telegraph becomes D. T. in the hands of the abbreviator, and it is not rare to find a bunch of initials, T. P. and D. T. and M. A. P. for instance, close together in one short paragraph.

In this country at one time the initials H. G. were known far and wide among newspaper readers to be the synonym for Horace Greeley, he himself increasing the abbreviation by signing Tribune editorials in that way.

We have a host of notables just now whose names, as Mr. Dooley would say, "are on the lips of every man in town." Perhaps to the interest of brevity we shall quote the English manner and make J. B. and J. P. with others that will cover to mind, short cuts to knowledge, Morgan, and so on.

Then as the list grows, prizes will be in order for the first correct guess as to who is meant in a particular connection.

Food Reform and Sentiment.

In the work of reform timeliness is everything, and the ruling high prices of food have made the past season favorable for the agitation of a vegetarian diet.

The argument of the pocketbook is often effective when all other pleas fail. During the summer food reformers, who were usually women, have agitated and demonstrated the claims of strict vegetable diet from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The claims were not all voiced in the same key, and it seems that the pocketbook argument was not emphasized. Perhaps that was taken for granted.

Brains and Drudgery.

Vacation is long enough past for average folks to feel settled down to the routine of drudgery, if that is the view they take of life's serious tasks. Most all will say that their annual outing gave them a taste of the joy of living, and if the theory of President Eliot of Harvard, as given in a recent address, is true there is an end to joy for a livelihood at least. President Eliot says that people who live by the exercise of the intellectual powers enjoy life of this sort better than those who work with their hands. It is drudgery which robs life of its joy, and drudgery is not confined to any particular phase of activity.

There is drudgery in every routine of labor unless the end in view lifts it to a higher plane. Hunting, fishing, boating and mountain climbing are drudgery to those doomed to this life with no compensating blessing in life to look on the promised land. Athletics are drudgery; writing and painting are drudgery; everything to which one must buckle down in order to get anywhere is drudgery. Gilson, the great artist, has quit making pictures in black and white because the end he had in view—the accumulation of a fortune—is accomplished. To continue at it would indeed be drudgery unbearable. Henceforth he'll drowse at painting in corners just to win glory and will not be a whit happier at the task.

Drudgery must enter into every life that is to count for anything and experience the true joy of living. The story of the spider spinning a thread innumerable times to get over a wall used to appear in every schoolbook as a lesson in perseverance. Spinning would be drudgery if the spider could not see the web at the finish. Human beings should have as much leisure to spin as a spider and find exercise for all of it in everything they do. That is exercising intellectual power in a way that never exhausts fire. Vastly more of the so-called intellectual class find life not worth living than of the hand toilers.

It is this dull monotony of any work which makes it drudgery, and the play of intellect can dispel monotony from the humblest task. The housewife who gets through her Monday's washing an hour earlier than usual or gets it on the line five minutes ahead of her busy next door neighbor or finds the linen pure white where it was dull gray the last time will not look back upon the long hours over the washbasin as intolerable drudgery. She scores a point by the invention of time saving expedients and in that way brings many a thrill of joy to ease the tired bones and muscles. Brains and toil are a good team. Brains make the work so quicker and truer and yield full results. They put a gilt edge upon drudgery.

A Terror of the Sea.

The arrival of the American schooner Berwind in her home port with three negro mutinees in iron and a gap in the ranks of the crew shows that there is still a possibility of murderous affairs at sea. In the Berwind mutiny the captain and four sailors lost their lives. Tragedies of the kind have been rare of late years, but in the early days of the merchant marine, when men were engaged on board and compelled to serve at the pistol's point, mutinies were far more common.

One of the most famous mutinies in the history of modern seafaring was that of the crew of the British ship Bounty, the fate of which was a mystery for half a century. The mutineers of the Bounty had themselves from the vengeance of the law by settling upon Pitcairn Island, in the south Pacific ocean, and from an aged participant in the tragedy the story of the mutiny was learned. The laws of today offer more protection than formerly to the rights of sailors, and there is less incentive to mutiny. The chances of escape for mutineers are also fewer now, owing to the close surveillance of vessels on the high seas.

The soldiers of the regular army have "soldier" away $200,000,000 in the safe keeping of the government. Many a king of the old style would have reigned in an army so thrifty, and in an emergency confiscate the pile to reinforce his war chest, but Uncle Sam is so pleased with the boys that he has added to their monthly wages.

Latest advices from the Pacific show that the typhoon which swept over the region of the Philippines in September was a terror of the old style. Whole islands were depopulated at the mouth of the Yangtze, in China, the loss of life being estimated at 100,000, and the damage to shipping was widespread.

The tobacco growers of the south are lining up against the tobacco trust the same as the cotton planters have lined up against the W. A. R. street "cheese." Will they, like them, follow the price of the raw stuff?

One of the insurance presidents under fire says there are two sides to the life insurance business. Premium payers have had a view at one side and are glad for a peep at the other.

General Williams thinks that no officer above the age of forty should hold rank of captain in the army. All the captains will vote for that, especially if the jump is to be $200,000,000.

The meat problem in Germany has assumed an acute form. Horses and even has risen in price, and dogfish is no longer obtainable. Some municipalities are buying up fish in large quantities to relieve the distress among the poor.

The latest dictum of science is, "Give a woman nothing to do and all the money she can spend and she will go to the dogs as fast as she can." That's because father or husband or brother has taught her to be "one of the boys."

John Ruskin said that in matters of criticism one should never come to particulars, for authors are apt to come down upon you with "authorities," there being an authority for almost every absurdity that can be committed, either in literary or practical matters.

In a letter to a college friend Ruskin wrote: "The object in all art is not to inform, but to suggest; not to add to the knowledge, but to kindle the imagination. He is the best poet who can by the fewest words touch the greatest number of secret chords of thought in his reader's own mind and set them to work in their own way. To put plain text into rhyme and meter is easy; not so to write a passage which every time it is remembered shall suggest a new train of thought, a new subject of delightful dream. It is this mystic secrecy of beauty which is the seal of the highest art, which only opens itself to close observation and long study."

Don't Forget the Date
The Miss Emmett, the well-known optician, will be at the office of Dr. Richardson Thursday giving free examinations of eyes. No one urged to buy.
