John Le Farre, the painter, was taiking in his studio about witty women.

"Let me relate a young woman's witticism that I heard of the other day," he said.

"There was a man who loved a maid, and she returned his passion; but there were reasons that made secrecy deartable, and thus, though the two were betrothed, they pretended to the world that they were good triends and nothing more.

"One evening, as the young man was pressing his sweetheart to his breast, her sister entered the room suddenly.

"The lovers drew spart with great haste, and the sister, with an "Ercuse me, 'turned to go.

"But the young man decemed an explanation necessary. He said:

"The intruder, standing by the door, tooked at the lovers intently. Then a delicate sum is filled tower her pretity face, and she said:

"You are about the same height, but I think sister is much the redden."
