OLD PIONEER PASSES AWAY

J. W. Bennett, Prominent Mason and Old Soldier, Dies Suddenly Monday.

J. W. Bennett, one of the best known citizens of Barrington and vicinity, and a man who was universally respected by our residents, passed away Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock from an attack of heart disease.

Mr. Bennett was born at Lake Zurich on Jan. 1, 1816, and with the exception of a few years spent in Iowa and Minnesota, has been a resident of this section for nearly fifty-nine years. Honest and upright in all his dealings with mankind, he won the confidence and esteem of his neighbors and acquaintances, and his happy disposition and kindness of heart made him many close personal friends.

On Nov. 25, 1869, Mr. Bennett was united in marriage to Miss Ella Webster—two children, Jay K., born Feb. 15, 1871, now living in Minnesota, and Florence Ella, born Oct. 25, 1872, who died July 14th last—blessing this union.

Mrs. Bennett died July 14, 1874, and on Oct. 15, two years later, the deceased took unto himself another helpmeet, by marrying Ida Cogen, who survives him. Four children were born to this second union—Charles L., living in Florida; Sanford L., residing in Minnesota; Robert A. and Francis Lovell, living in this city.

Mr. Bennett was engaged in agricultural pursuits near Lake Zurich up to a few years ago, when he retired and made a home for his family in Barrington in which to spend the rest of his days.

The deceased was a Mason, and served his country during the civil war. He had always been of robust health, and only for three or four days before his death had been heard of complaining of feeling slightly ill, and his death came as a surprise and shock to our citizens and his family.

The funeral services were conducted at 1 o'clock this (Friday) afternoon, at the family home, and the remains were taken to Wauconda for interment.

Wanted—Five cords of dry hardwood. Apply to M. B. McIntosh, Barrington.

GIVES LINEN SHOWER.

A Pleasant Social Affair at the Home of Mrs. F. O. Willmarth.

The "linen shower" given for Miss Mary Taylor by Mrs. F. O. Willmarth Tuesday afternoon at her home on Main street was a source of great pleasure to all who attended, and a veritable shower of a variety of fine things for the honored girl.

Amusements of a bridal nature entertained the guests and each one was adorned with a white heart embossed with a silver wedding bell. An impromptu cook book was written for Miss Taylor by experienced cooks whose old and tried recipes may some day be a helpful reminder of this happy afternoon. A luncheon was served.

Notice—St. Ann's Sewing Circle are taking orders for aprons of all kinds. Good work at low rates. Your orders are solicited.

DEDICATION TO BE FRIDAY

School Building, However, Will Be Open for Inspection Thursday Evening.

Work on the interior of the new school building is being pushed with a vim. Furniture is being installed rapidly and on next Thursday evening from 7:30 to 9 o'clock the doors will be thrown open to the citizens for an inspection. Each teacher will occupy the room assigned to them, and will greet the visitors and show them around.

Friday evening of next week has been fixed upon for the dedication of the magnificent new school building, County Superintendent, Nightingale and his assistants, Peter Downey and Charles W. Farr will be present and deliver addresses, as well as others from out of town are expected. Speeches and music will be the order of the evening. The ladies' band is also expected to furnish several selections.

A new $200 Starck piano has been purchased, and will be used for the first time on the above occasion. The piano is all paid for excepting about $100, and it would be a generous thing for our citizens to do if they should put their heads together between now and next Thursday evening and clear up this debt on the piano.

The School Bazaar Was Well Attended and Proves a Novel and Pleasing Affair.

The School Bazaar, given at the old school building last Friday evening, was a pronounced success, there being nearly two hundred dollars cleared. The school children's parade Friday afternoon evidently had the desired effect, for the six rooms, two halls and library of the old building were packed to overflowing, no doubt the largest crowd the schoolhouse ever held during its history of half a century. A jolly, happy, jostling, good natured throng it was, come to help about a good cause—to decorate the new building.

At 3 p. m. Friday three former pupils of the schoolhouse a party, planned and organized by the husband, merchant, A. W. Meyer. First come a horse and buggy, loaded with the paraphernalia which proclaimed in no mistakable language the facts concerning the bazaar, and the advice to all to bring their pocket books. Next came two small ponies, decorated with various bits of information, and decorated with buggies loaded with small gifts which carried appropriate banners. Next a large drum brought up the rear. This parade traversed every street in town and spread the news well.

The first and second rooms served supper to over one hundred people from 5 p. m. to 7:30 p. m. at the village hall. They then carried out their part at the school building.

The first room had "The Old Woman who Lived in a Shoe." This old woman sold dolls. The spider web, fish ponds, etc., made up the balance of the work of this room.

The second room gave a "Side Show" consisting of Mother Goose stories continuous—admission, 10c. The room was well filled during the entire evening. This room also sold souvenirs.

The third and fourth rooms united and made booths representing the different nations. These nations sold a great variety of articles.

The fifth room had charge of the ice cream, cake and coffee. This room was much frequented by the large crowd from the fact that ten gallons of cream was sold in three quarters of an hour.

The high school department conducted an Indian shooting gallery, a goose exchange, pop corn stand, pop stand, candy stand, peanut stand, odds and ends stand, vying for the most popular of all, guessing the number of grains on an ear of corn. In the dusk, how long a New Haven eight-day clock will run, and four boys gave a "Side Show" in the library, rendering the following program:

1. Sonora de Castillana, the wonderful snake charmer.
2. Mademoiselle La Comte, the famous ballet dancer.
3. The Swimming Match.
4. The Belle of the Barrington high school.
5. Little Wee-wee, the educated horse.
6. Bonaparte crossing the Rhine.
7. The Hero of Barrington.
Admission, 10 Cents.

This "show" was well patronized, being given nine times, with a full house each time.

The auction sales, in which the articles were sold to the last bidder, not the highest bidder, each party paying what he bid, were a glittering success, sixteen dollars being realized on one fruit stand alone.

The New Haven eight-day clock is in the custody of A. W. Meyer, who has wound it and will notify and deliver the clock to the successful guesser when it runs down.

The voting contest for the most popular young lady in Barrington closed in favor of Miss Harriet Robertson. A silver spoon was given to the successful contestant.

James Hawley was the best guesser on the number of grains on the ear of corn. A cyclone watch was the prize. Everything of any importance was sold out.

The teachers and pupils deserve to be complimented upon the successful issue of their enterprise.

Farm For Rent on Shares.

My farm for rent on shares—two and a half miles east of Duode and five and a half miles southwest of Barrington. F. O. WILLMARTH.

A level-headed exchange says: "Learn this one thing: learn it early in life and learn it well—that the man who knows himself believes as you do is not always a fool. The fact that you hold views not in accord with your neighbor is not positive proof that you are right and he is wrong, nor is it any evidence that he is insincere. If it were not true, then all smart men would belong to one party and all good men go to one church. And if all belonged to one party and one church they would break up both party and church."

Forty Hour Devotional Services.

Under the leadership of the Reverend Father Fox a period of "forty hour devotions" were conducted at St. Ann's, beginning Sunday morning and terminating Tuesday morning. During the time continuous prayers were offered by members of the parish who were present in relays. High mass was celebrated the three mornings, and a lecture followed by prayers each evening at 7:30. An unusual attendance was present at these meetings, among whom were many non-Catholics, who are cordially invited to all services. The learned and instructive lectures given by Father Fox are a source of spiritual comfort and information to all.

A PRETTY HOME WEDDING

Miss Mary Taylor and Mr. Gus H. Niemeyer Are United in Marriage Wednesday.

A pretty home wedding occurred Wednesday afternoon at five o'clock, when Miss Mary Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ryan, was married to Gus H. Niemeyer of Arlington Heights, at the home of her parents on Grove avenue.

The house was tastefully decorated in white blossoms and the boy windows arranged in a bower of graceful beauty. It was here under a wedding veil of white flowers and smiles that the young people were awaited by the Rev. Father Fox of St. Ann's.

Miss Taylor was gorgeously arrayed in white pearls, and carried a bouquet of white roses, and was attended by her cousin, Miss Anna Dolan, who wore a white gown and carried pink flowers.

Another cousin of the bride, Miss Elsie Costello, presiding at the piano, played a beautiful entrance march for the bridal party which came from upstairs. A simple ceremony was followed.

A wedding supper was served and was delightful in all its appointments. Besides immediate relatives only a few friends from Arlington Heights and Barrington were present.

Miss Taylor has practically been raised in Barrington, and is widely known as a young woman of personal charm and character, with many attainments. We shall miss her in the social life of the young people.

Mr. Niemeyer is quite generally known here, having been reared in so near a village and he is recognized as a young man whose principles and abilities are above the average. He is a representative of a New York business firm.

Their departure was at 8:40 and was accompanied by showers of rice and good wishes from scores of friends who gathered to assist in the honors.

After a visit among relatives in Babylon, they will return here Sunday, leaving Monday for St. Louis, Louisville, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Montreal and New York, where they will reside permanently.

LAKE BLUFF WINS OUT.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 20.—[Special.]—Efforts of interested parties to have the government abandon Lake Bluff as a site for the naval training station have failed in their beginning. Rear Admiral Converse, chief of the bureau of navigation, who has charge of all naval stations, will submit to Secretary Dingley and in preparation for a recommendation that congress be asked to make a large appropriation during the coming session for use during the fiscal year 1906-07 in the construction of barracks, offices, and other improvements at Lake Bluff. The appropriation of $250,000 now available is being expended in surveying, clearing the land, and in preparation for the work of construction. Plans have been prepared for the creation of a station which will cost in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. At first accommodations will be provided for 2,000 boys.

Don't Forget the Date.

Miss Emmett, the well-known optician, will be at the office of Dr. Richardson Thursday giving free examinations of eyes. No one urged to buy.

The first game of football of the season was played here Saturday afternoon between the Woodstock High School boys and the Palatine boys. Our boys did some bad playing or else were so sure of winning that they thought they did not need to play, and so the Woodstock boys scored 12 to 0 in the first half, and in the second half our boys woke up and kept them from scoring but also did the same themselves, leaving the visitors victorious by a score of 12 to 0. "A poor beginning makes a good ending," says.

America's Model Homes.

If the social moralists whose point of view is the crowded city have taken note on the spot during the season's "old home" festival they must have returned to town very much enlightened as to the persistence of the American home idea in spite of ruthless social progress. The home as our mothers and grandmothers knew it remains a prominent if not the dominant feature of American rural life. All America has not moved into an apartment house or a flat, and the signs are that it will not for generations to come.

Millions of families in this country live today in the houses where those of the same blood and generally of the same name lived 50 to 100 years ago. With the house and land have come down the old traditions and the old spirit. The house is kept up as a family nest, a refuge. There "boys and girls" of two and maybe three generations gather to romp and be happy, to mourn and rejoice, to be married or to give in marriage. The friends today may be more instead of a fireplace, but the romantic warmth is there still, although romantic appointments are lacking. Paper now covers the old whitewashed walls and bright prints crowd grandmother's old portrait above the mantel. Even furnishings and bric-a-brac from the department stores adorn the parlor and sitting room, but somehow the old place cannot be disguised internally any more than externally, where point and numerous additions only serve to accentuate the ancient and picturesque architecture.

And the modern built, modern furnished rural home is only a change in form of the home of the past. It is a place to be happy, to grow strong and to come back to when the world gives the restless, pleasure seeking boys and girls the cold shoulder, as it is bound to do first or last. Faithful, earnest, careful men and women still toil and economize to "keep up a home for the children," and the children's children come in for a rich share of the blessing. This is the creation John Howard Payne had in mind when he said:

There's no place like home.
The American home idea is too well grounded in the needs of human nature to be in danger of destruction. The American mother, the goddess of the home, remains, and the one object of her devoted life is the welfare of her offspring. A real home shelters them in youth and attracts them in later years. It is the center of the making habit, and the masses of this country will never cease to individualize and to idealize their place of dwelling.

The German Tariff and Meat Famine.
Diminished supply of hogs in New York due to the closing of the German frontier against importations and the high prices following, is causing distress in the fatherland. It is openly declared by municipal officials of Berlin that in so far as the masses are concerned the ruling prices of meat are almost prohibitive.

Recently a Socialist leader in the Berlin municipal council asserted that the present meat rates would vastly increase the ranks of the Social Democracy. At this meeting it was shown that the price of meat had increased nearly 50 per cent under the new tariff system, and the prediction was made that the government would be compelled to reopen the frontiers to importations.

College Boys Who Don't Think.
The common school boys who want to know everything without "boiling down" to studies manage somehow to get into college, according to George P. Baker of Harvard, who writes on the subject in the Educational Review. Says Professor Baker:

As I work year by year with these youths there is a sentence which keeps recurring to me with renewed significance. It is "Now and then be idle; and think. I should like to see that verse written large somewhere upon the walls of Harvard college, because I work with these undergraduates I am more and more surprised to find that they do not know how to think accurately, cogently, but that many of them have no real interest in knowing how to think well. Many of them mean to enter the law school and therefore wish training in debate. Many suspect that some day they will have to speak in public and wish the requisite training. Far too many of both groups desire the end, but care nothing for the means, the process by which it may best be attained. It is only by forcing, coaxing, that one can develop in these youths an interest in thinking for thinking's sake. One can make them appreciate the fact that there is a delicate pleasure in the process of thinking.

The writer admits that in rare cases an awakening comes after graduation, but doubts that a student ever makes up for wasted opportunities at college. He adds:
I believe that the causes for this heedlessness in undergraduates lie back of college and school—in the home, in the very nature of nature, American life today. Whether we can get at the conditions in the home or not, we certainly can in the school and college. But first we must recognize the condition and our present failure to grapple with it.

Bullet Hole Stories.
In the curio dealer's private office a half dozen shabby pocket Bibles are placed two-thirds through with a round hole, like a bullet hole.
"They are bullet holes," said the dealer. "I know they are because I name them myself."
He gave a loud laugh.

"A good many of my rich patrons," he said, "like to have saved their old Bibles that have saved some soldier ancestor's life."
He winked.
"If you are a Son of the Revolution," he said, "what a nice thing it is to take down one of these perforated Bibles from a shelf in the library and hand it to your guest, saying:
"This Bible saved the life of my maternal sixty-third cousin, Colonel Abraham McGill, in the night attack upon the British led by General James at their camp on the 24 day of August, and so forth, and so on."

Peace and Recent reports are not cheering to those who believe that peace is to be the forerunner of important governmental reforms. There are abundant assurances from high sources that the navy will be rebuilt and the army reorganized, but there is deep and ominous silence on the subject of enlarging popular rights. On the contrary, it is hinted darkly that the czar regrets the liberal wording of his manifesto convoking a national conference and is disposed to amend it in such a manner as to rob it of any significance whatever.

It is a matter of popular belief that M. Witte's skillful treatment of the Jewish question, especially his sympathetic attitude toward the representative Hebrews who appealed to him on his recent visit to America, will enable Russia to enter the financial market as a successful borrower. Large loans will undoubtedly be negotiated. There is every reason to believe that America will be a party to these financial operations. There is not the slightest assurance that this good American money will be devoted to the best interests of the community of the Russian empire. There is not even a pretense that it will be used to extend education, provide domestic improvements or reconstitute the country's languishing industries.

The suggestion is repellent, but there is reason to believe that the cause of reform has been advanced by the making of peace. There are those who believe that Russia was on the high road to emancipation from the intolerable slavery which has bound her people and that now the chain is removed. Freed from the Asiatic mission, the czar will be less inclined to listen to the demands of his outraged subjects and more willing to accept the halfhearted counsel of the self-seeking grand dukes. That at least is the pessimistic view taken by some of the most prominent Liberals in the empire.

The "Great American Novel."
Hail Caine, the popular English novelist, promptly disavowed the ambition attributed to him of wishing to put American millionaires into a novel. He said:

"I do not feel able to attempt such an undertaking. I do not know American millionaires well enough, and so your Englishmen are in no danger. American authors are better qualified for the task. It is not for me to attempt to write what will be the great American novel. There is nothing I would like better to do but I cannot."
I would rather write that story than be president of the United States. I would rather write the story of wealth and its relation to society than achieve the diplomatic triumph of your president in bringing about peace between Russia and Japan. There is nothing in the world more than to write about this, but no one knows so well that he can't do it as I.

Mr. Caine further declared that America is the proper scene for a novel of that character because it "is the country that best typifies those conditions that seem to make the rich constantly richer and the poor poorer. It is the money country of the world." In his opinion the subject is the greatest possible for the greatest genius America can produce. With this hint the American legion of authors can strike out boldly, confident that they are on the right track.

No Compromise With Robbers.
The American Bankers' association proposes to put a stop to the practice of allowing bank embezzlers to "settle" by returning the whole or a part of the stolen funds and escape criminal punishment. This is a wholesome change, and the fact that it is needed shows that rascals have been allowed to escape and that perhaps without publicity.

The new rule establishes the idea that it is more important to enforce the law and make thieves dangerous than to get back part of the cash. Here, therefore the embezzler of a few thousands generally landed in the penitentiary, but the looter of a million could well afford to restore the greater part in order to enjoy the remainder undisturbed.

From Panama comes the allegation that General Ivan Butler once proposed to President Lincoln during the civil war to send the colored soldiers to dig the isthmian canal. This is a hint that the negro problem of the south, and that of digging the canal might be settled at one stroke. But it happens that the canal Butler had in mind was the Dutch Gap canal, a little war enterprise of his own.

According to the Medical Record the claim that the juices of fruits and vegetables had been found a cure for consumption was premature. This paper says that the juices of all vegetables and of apples and pineapples have simply been added in certain cases of curable type to the diet heretofore found beneficial.

Up to the present time only about fifteen different American citizens have taken the credit of bringing about peace between Japan and Russia. But of course there are a large number still to be heard from.

Pretty little Mrs. Ferris looked up from the yellow paper she held to stare at her husband in a daisy that was almost tragic.

"Whatever in the world am I to do?" she demanded. "You know when Marion landed on Thursday I wrote her that she simply must come to us for Sunday, and now here's a telegram from Harris Rogers saying that he will be out tonight too. Luckily they have not selected the same train. But what am I to do with them?"

Her husband, glancing abstractly over his paper, wrinkled his brow.

"Well, what of it?" he asked. "Did not you want some man for Marion?" "Of course," indignantly. "I did not. Dick Perivald, but he couldn't come. However, Harris Rogers is here, so I knew I could depend on him. He admires Marion tremendously. But Harris! Don't you realize that it is hardly six months since his engagement to Marion was broken off? It was just after that she went abroad."

"Mr. Ferris, what is the matter?" she asked. "No it is, I forgot." "Isn't it awful?" gasped his wife. "Of course I've always told Harris that he is not to do with Marion. I telegraphed that to him, so, of course, I thought I never could have imagined anything so terrible as this. And I don't know why the engagement was broken off, and I don't care. I'm fond of them both. But how ever can I explain his coming to Marion? She'll always believe that I did it on purpose," despairingly. "She'll never forgive me."

"Mr. Ferris, don't imagine that the gravity of the crisis, laid down its paper. 'I will tell you what we must do now,' he began slowly. 'We shall have to devote ourselves to the duty, though that they never will be left alone together for a moment. I will have Marion on my mind tonight, and you take Harris. Tomorrow we can switch off so that it won't seem so apparent. That ought to work pretty well,' he declared, brightening up. 'And after all it's only for two evenings and a day.'

Mrs. Ferris, resigning herself to the inevitable, exhaled a smile.

"Well," she said stoically, "it's the best we can do. We'll try."

Finer, however, was not a success. Despite the best efforts of host and hostess conversation languished and constraint was in the air. With the peculiar fatality that so often attends attempts to enter into subjects touched upon were usually the most important that could have been mentioned, ranging from unhappy marriage to divorce and from an excuse for present failure to a reason for desert. "While in the language of never speak of the rope," says a proverb. But some how the rope always will obtrude itself. By the time Harris had returned to the drawing room Mrs. Ferris was in a state of nervous tension almost beyond endurance.

A quiet game of bridge somewhat restored her equanimity. Conversation over the card table was necessarily limited. And so the evening passed.

"But I could see that poor Marion was bored to death," said Mrs. Ferris to her husband when at last the guests were safely dismissed in their own rooms. "She hates cards. And as for me, I never knew whether I was playing spades or whist. But what else was there to do? She was dreadfully upset when I told her Harris was coming. She flushed all up, though she tried to murmur something about please not minding it. It seems as if hasn't seen since the day of their quarrel. So of course it was awkward for her. What shall we do all tomorrow?" distractedly. "And if it rains?" "But it did not rain. The sun, climbing gayly over the tree tops, brought with him a perfect day of blue and gold. The morning was safely got through with at all events. And after a leisurely stroll home it was time for luncheon. The Robinsons from across the road, the Burhams from down the river and one or two others dropped in for the midday meal. Harry Robinson greeted Miss Trevor with unconcealed joy.

"I didn't know that you were in this country," he exclaimed. The girl laughed.

"I am going home tomorrow," she explained. "But Mrs. Ferris wouldn't hear of my leaving without giving her a day first. And so here I am."

"And so the gods are kind," supplemented young Robinson. "I say, don't you want to come out on the river with me? It would be heavenly and cool. Do come," urgently.

"Now?" asked the girl doubtfully. She glanced about the table. Luncheon was nearly over, and the men had begun to puff comfortably at their pipes and cigarettes. Harris Rogers, an eager light in his brown eyes, was leaning forward talking earnestly to Muriel Heath, who sat smilingly and daintily in the freshest of muslin regarded him with an amused smile. Miss Trevor's mouth tightened. Then she turned to Robinson.

"Come along," she said quickly. "I'd love to."

Mrs. Ferris, watching their departure, drew a deep breath of relief. That disposal of Marion for awhile at least. And when, after the other guests had taken their leave, Harris announced his intention of taking a brisk walk Mrs. Ferris' spirits lifted upward. She and Bob, whose part of the day had dry. Catching up a towel, she hurried to the river. Their husbands' exclamations to them.

It was late when they reentered the house. Mrs. Ferris, her hands all gray despite the gardening gloves, she essayed to wear and which usually reposed on the nearest bush. On passing she cast a glance about the girl's room. Empty! The front door had been slammed. Then again it opened and shut. Mrs. Ferris, feeling very guilty, scrambled swiftly into her frock. Her fearful looks showed two alone. Had Marion not been off rowing with young Robinson they would all have gone for a drive together and there would have been no such contretemps. But now, absorbed in her garden, she had quite forgotten her responsibilities as hostess.

Still a little breathless from her haste, she flew down the stairs. Then, arrested by the sound of voices in the drawing room, Mrs. Ferris stopped suddenly.

They were talking, actually talking. In these, the evening hours.

"And this is positively the very first chance I've had to speak to you," complained a voice, unmistakably belonging to Harris. "Last night playing cards and church this morning. And then to speak of this afternoon with that Robinson!"

"Well, you seemed perfectly content with Muriel Heath," came a spirited response. "I don't care anything about Harris Robinson," rather vaguely.

"And I'm sure that I don't care anything about Muriel Heath," was the retort. "She was only saying what a badly girl you and how much she liked you. I could hardly disagree with her." In an aggrieved tone, voice, now, Marion—the voice changed abruptly—"haven't we been foolish long enough?"

"Well," said the girl reluctantly.

Mrs. Ferris, uttering a little gasp, caught at the sound of her own voice. There, his arm about the girl's waist, her eyes looking happily up into his, stood Harris and Marion, the two that Mrs. Ferris and Bob had worked so faithfully to keep apart. At sight of her both started and flushed guiltily. But Mrs. Ferris's sudden sparkle of comprehension dawned in her great gray eyes, she stepped forward.

"Marion, do you know—did you guess—that Harris?"

The girl, over whose face the rosy waves of color exulted, tried to steady her traitorous lips.

"Well, I—I didn't know whether he would come or not," she confessed, "but I wrote that I would be here."

The CONVICTION or FIGHTING for a MILLION

CHAPTER XVII.

The first night in the convict city. John Rogers and Richard Golden led the way toward the well-lit building in the center of the city.

"What relation are you to Golden?" asked Wilson of Lang.

"No relation," answered Lang.

"How is it you appear to have power to influence Golden for good? I feel that Golden is a better man now than before he met you."

"I saved his life," was Lang's simple answer.

"Why did you interfere in my behalf?" was the grateful question of Wilson.

"My sense of justice. Could I stand idly by and see a human being torn to pieces by dogs, when I might save him?"

"What do you think of your chances now? You understand in what danger you have placed yourself by aiding me!"

"Oh, my chances are all right. Golden has an object in view in keeping me alive—and I mean to keep you alive! Now that I have seen your face, I have an idea that you and I can pull pretty well together. How many men, placed in your position, would have refused aid as you did, just because your willing friend would become involved? That showed me that you were worth the risk I took."

"Wilson stared on Lang in amazement. 'You are the queerest man I ever met. It is hard to believe that you are a scoundrel—yet I presume you are, or you would not be here!'"

"So? Well, I robbed Jim Denver, the Chicago detective of ten thousand dollars!" said Lang, as if in excuse for being in the convict city.

"You damned scoundrel! You let Wilson, and he threw himself upon Lang as if to annihilate him. Lang was taken by surprise at the onslaught, but was quicker than Wilson, who had scarce recovered from the fatigue of his chase.

"So you love Denver?" said Lang in a low tone, as he deftly plucked the other's arm to his side. "You love him enough to kill the man who has done him a wrong? Suppose I tell Golden that Denver is a friend of yours? Wilson and Lang had dropped of a hall or theater, was finished in a circle, circus-like, with an enclosed ring and raised seats from which in any part of the house the spectators could command a clear view of anything transpiring on the stage. It was undoubtedly modeled after the Coliseum of Rome.

John Rogers walked with Lang and Golden with Wilson down the incline and into the ring.

The renowned Dr. Schiller sat upon the raised platform. There was nothing about him to denote that he was king. He was dressed as the majority, in plain black evening dress and spoolless linen.

Upon the platform were four other seats. Upon one sat Dr. Hunsdon, he had bathed in tears; and Louis Lang thought that he had never looked upon a more lovely and pitiable sight. Upon another, with a gavel in his hands, and a small table with a marble top before him, sat the crier of the city. The two other chairs were empty.

Schiller bowed to Golden, coldly, but showed no surprise in seeing him, and nodded also at Rogers, motioning them to occupy the two seats upon the platform.

At a motion from Schiller, the crier stood the stage with his gavel and commanded silence.

"Ladies and gentlemen of Paradise," the crier said, "we are about to administer the oath to these men and women, and that you may judge of their merits intelligently, I shall give you a brief history of each, after which, if there are no objections registered, the king will read the oath."

Then he introduced each candidate, giving an account of their many supposed virtues and vices.

Lang being unknown to the crier, Golden was then requested to give a short biography of our hero. This was done in quite a dramatic manner. He ended up his little introduction with words something like this:

"In a hand to hand fight, the prettiest of its kind I ever witnessed, he killed Long Hope, the Indian chief, the head of the band who attacked our train! Three days ago he saved my life from the hand of Revolver Rob, who would have assassinated me but for his interposition. He is a white man; a true man; he is worthy to be one of us!"

"The candidates will now stand before me," said Schiller, rising, "while the king will read the oath. I repeat your name after me."

"I, Louis Lang, said our hero, 'renew allegiance to the President of the United States, and to the State of Illinois, or any other state wherein I may have resided, and declare my allegiance to the king of Paradise, and intention of obeying all orders and laws originating from him! That I will do all in my power to make the others do the same thing. That I will not see a citizen wronged if in my power to prevent it, and that I will share and share alike with all that I possess or may possess. That if I fail in any essential degree, or prove a traitor, the law, through his head, the king, may extract from me whatever punishment it will, even to the taking of my life. These I do solemnly swear and agree to before these, the citizens of Paradise."

"That was the oath as repeated by all. Then the king pronounced each and all members of the colony, ending up with:

"Let me impress upon you the solemnity of the oath you have just taken. You are no longer citizens of the United States, but belong body and soul to Paradise! You have expressed your assent to abide by its laws; this is clear to you. You will be expected to work, to do your share in supporting the country and increasing its wealth. You cannot leave the city without a written permit from me, the king. If you prove yourselves traitors, death is the penalty! Death is also the penalty for other misdeeds, but here you have one chance of escape; but to be a traitor is death instant. Now that I have, I hope, made myself plain, I warn you, study the law, that your days may be long and happy ones."

After delivering his speech Schiller sat down, while several others stepped seats for the several groups and allotted to them places to sleep. Thus far the king had seen fit not to notice Wilson to the extent of speaking to him, presumably weighing well his words before compromising himself. During the hall he sat staring at Wilson like a savage beast, seemingly getting more angry every minute. Wilson calmly returned the glance, smiling frequently, which seemed to madden the king more and more.

"What are you doing here?" the king finally asked, in a voice showing suppressed excitement. The assemblage was on the qui vive.

Wilson did not flinch nor tremble, but like the brave man he was, with slow step approached the platform which represented the throne. Lang approached also. Before Wilson made answer, Golden spoke up. "He is here by my authority," he said, coolly, realizing that the crisis was at hand.

Then Schiller turned to Golden. Being in a measure prepared for Golden's championship, he was not surprised. "Why do you bring him here?" he asked.

"For no other reason than that I desire to see fair play accorded him!" was the quiet reply.

"You know then that he has been condemned to death?" was the fierce question.

"I do," replied Golden rising.

"And yet you dare to bring him here?"

"Certainly! I made the laws by which this colony is governed," proudly, "and I say that there is no law which gives even the king right to unjustly condemn a human being to death without cause. There is an expressed murmur of admiration from the crowd.

"The king is supreme!" said Schiller for the moment of his guard at the seeming audacity of Golden.

"Most powerful czar!" said Golden, bowing in mock honor to Schiller while a smile of scorn played round his face. The king saw his mistake and flushed scarlet.

"And so it has come to pass that the people of Paradise have granted to you the power of life and death without question? I won't believe it! I still maintain that the king is not the law, simply the instrument—and I appeal to the people of Paradise! No one has power to condemn an innocent to death but in open assembly."

The vast assemblage seemed to rise to their feet as if of one body. Their cries were deafening. "No! he has not this power!"

"I thank you," said Golden, flushed with victory. "I knew that such could not be the case. Without hesitation then, place Wilson in your keeping! Condemned to death by the king, daring to restrain the king from committing a crime against humanity, he has successfully evaded capture! Hunted by the bloodhounds who guard your gates, by the aid of Louis Lang (whom you have granted equal suffrage with yourself) he has killed his savage pursuers, and I maintain that he deserves freedom at your hands!"

"Yes! yes! So be it!" was the cry. Schiller arose. He saw his power slipping from him. Crafty to a high degree he did not intend to surrender until he had wiped out the bitter sting of defeat.

CHANCE FOR A GUESS.

Dorothy's Directions Strong Where

Mother's Fell Down Worth.

Twelve-year-old Dorothy is already a cook of no mean proficiency. Saturday morning frequently finds her in the kitchen, being initiated into the making of a simple dish.

"Oh, put in a moderately generous pinch of salt," her mother will reply to her anxious inquiry. Or her grandmother will give a little more salt at the step and say, "Well, if I were making it I think I'd probably put in quite a little more butter."

Such remarks, coming easily from the tongues of artists who have only to look at a bit of cookery in process of making to know exactly what it needs, are exasperating to a youthful cook, especially one who inherits from her mother or other side a predilection for scientific accuracy of statement.

Recently Dorothy, returning from a visit, excited the interest even of her mother and grandmother, by making a wonderful new salad dressing. The two ladies shortly afterward tried to make the dressing, under Dorothy's instruction.

"We'll," said Dorothy, with natural deliberation, "if I were making that dressing I shouldn't be surprised if most likely I'd put in a moderately generous pinch of salt and a little more butter!"

"What a table-spooner!" Youth's Companion.

TO BEGIN PURE FOOD CRUSADE

Chicago Restaurant Patrons Are Said to Get Quicker Milk.

The milk and foodstuffs of scores of restaurants in Chicago will probably soon be under the critical eye of inspectors and chemists of the Illinois pure food board, who are preparing to analyze the milk and foodstuffs of restaurants. Numerous complaints have been made to Commissioner Jones lately against impure and adulterated milk and eatables that have been served in dozens of restaurants and lunchrooms. Assistant Commissioner Jones said that it is likely that a general investigation soon will be begun by the inspectors of the department.

J. P. Lee, a traveling salesman, lodged a complaint against the milk and foodstuffs of a restaurant in a first-class cafe.

"I paid enough for the milk," the traveling man said, "to get the pure lactical food. I gave the milk. It must have been a funny kind of a cow. Talk about 'Blue John,' the man who invented that brand of milk could get over enough from that to had to drink to win in any contest. Just below the top it was a dully heavy blue that looked like it would be an ingredient for an artist's paint color."

Mr. Lee declared that he believed the milk was adulterated and he said he would have to bet on naming everything that was in the pure milk.

The commissioners believe from the complaints they have received that scores of restaurants and lunchrooms have been guilty of violations of the law in order to secure more profit through using adulterated and impure milk and foodstuffs.

"We'll have to proceed about securing samples from the various places in a careful way, so as not to raise suspicion of our motive," Mr. Patterson said. "The only way our inspectors can do that is to go to the various places and dine and take away samples with them. The difficult part about it will be that one man will have to be able to eat much to secure a number of samples at a time."

Mr. Patterson declared that the commission has received a number of complaints on "hash and ham-burgers" served at a number of places.

"Only the Lord knows what is in them at present," one man said, "but the pure food commission should try to find out for the benefit of the public."

FIND BODY NEAR AN OLD MILL

Farm Hand Goes to Carmi and Engages in Drinking Bout.

On the platform of an old mill near the outskirts of the city of Carmi the body of William Wells was found with knife wounds in the head and abdomen. A crowd of the mill, which is situated near the river, were found evidences of a terrible struggle in which more than one assailant is supposed to have helped murder Wells. It is thought Wells was lured to the mill, murdered and robbed. Wells claimed Eppingham as his home and had been working for a farmer near Carmi. Wells was paid about $50. With this in his pocket he went to town and when found Sunday morning he was penniless. He was seen in company with several young men Saturday night and was drinking. A handkerchief, on which his assailants wiped the blood from their hands after committing the deed, is the only clue. Wells was preparing to return to Eppingham, where his people live, and was taking his earnings with him. He was unmarried.

Threw himself upon Lang as if to annihilate him.

about twenty feet behind Golden and Rogers, and as the scuffle had been a noiseless one, no one had noticed it.

Wilson lunged his head. "I couldn't help it, Lang. You in your position were so sudden. Denver has been a friend of mine—(doggedly) he is now, and when I heard you say you had robbed him, I could not restrain myself."

"What am I to think of you?" asked Lang. "Are you a spy?"

"Hush!" said Wilson in alarm. "Not so loud, for God's sake! If the people thought that my life would be worth a penny!"

"Never mind," soothingly returned Lang, who guessed at the truth. "I have my suspicions. After we have settled our present difficulties, I may see you later. By the way, do you recognize this?" squeezing the man's hand in a fashion peculiar to Jim Denver.

Wilson was puzzled for a moment. He would have replied, but the party now had arrived in front of the Assembly Hall.

"The king is here," said Golden to Lang. "You will be requested to take the oath of allegiance!"

It was not strange that the quartette had met no one in their journey to the hall. This was a gala night in Paradise on account of the arrival of stores and the fact that the girls brought into the city were to be auctioned off (or rather raffled off). All persons able were assembled in the hall.

Quite a commotion was aroused at the sight of the four, and for several minutes Golden's name was on everybody's tongue. There was handshaking and general greeting.

The hands of a clock on the front of the building pointed to eight; and the striking of a gong on the outside notified the people that the opening ceremonies were about to begin. At this juncture the ushers led the way into the room, the formation of which was a revelation to Lang. The interior, instead of being in the shape

There isn't an article in the store but what has been marked at bargain prices. Take advantage of the prices quoted in his ad. on the first page and look for his announcement next week.

A young lady, in a town not far distant, found one of her mothers' letters one day recently. To this she substituted her own name and that of her fellow and race to her mother who at once forbade the daughter to have anything to do with a young man that would write such sickening stuff to a girl. The young lady then gave the letter to her mother to read, and suddenly the house became so quiet you could have heard the grass grow out on the lawn.

WAUCONDA MENTION.

And then it rained.

J. M. Fuller announces a dance for Saturday evening, October 21.

L. E. Maiman has returned from his vacation and is again at his place in the drug store.

H. Maiman and C. E. Jenks were Waukegan visitors Tuesday.

Miss Fern Hutchinson spent Sunday at her home at Barrington.

Mrs. Catharine Wicke spent the first of the week at the home of H. Maiman and family, enroute to her home at Fairfax, Iowa, from Belgium.

Mrs. C. L. Pratt spent the first of the week with relatives and friends at Waukegan.

Our community was shocked to learn of the sudden death of Jay Bennett at his Barrington home Monday afternoon.

Miss Carrie Pratt has secured a position in the Waukegan telephone office and will take up her work next Monday morning.

A Cribbage Club has been organized our village with 21 members. Each member is to play 10 games with every other member and the winner will receive the title, "Champion Cribbage Player of Wauconda," besides an appropriate prize.

James Grace, a pioneer of Lake county, died at his home in Wauconda, Tuesday night, aged 63 years. The funeral service was held from the Transfiguration church, Wauconda, at 10 o'clock this morning.

LAKE ZURICH NEWS.

Miss Emma Huebner is visiting at Wm. Ernsting's.

The Knickerbocker Ice Co. have six carpenters at work building a hotel 40 by 90 feet for the ice men.

Don't forget the dance given by the July Four Saturday night, Oct. 21.

J. Dickson is wearing that happy smile again. A son was born Oct. 18.

There has been a few complaints about the shooting on our lake on account of some reckless shooting, and also some one shooting with a rifle.

It would be a good plan for those who rent boats to be a little particular as to who they let take their boats, and also let no one take a rifle. This would avoid much trouble.
