

BARRINGTON'S NEW SCHOOL TO BE DEDICATED TONIGHT

Appropriate Music to be Features of the Evening.—Dr. A. F. Nightingale to be the Chief Orator—Pupils Took Possession of Building Wednesday.

School was held in the magnificent new school building for the first time Wednesday morning. Prof. Hantz made a few appropriate remarks to the pupils, impressing upon them the fact that in no other way could they show their appreciation of the elegant and comfortable quarters provided for them by the generosity of the citizens of Barrington, than by regular attendance, zealous study, and perfect deportment. A large number of Barrington citizens inspected the building last evening from 7:30 to 9 o'clock, and this evening the dedication exercises will be held. Following is the program:

In a Flourishing Condition

George Lytle represented the Barrington Y. M. C. A. at the state convention held at Bloomington Oct. 19, 20, 21, 22, and made a formal report at a meeting held Monday evening for that purpose.

He reported 165 delegates present and $2500 appropriated to carry on the work in the state for the coming year. This is in marked contrast with the first state convention held in that city thirty-two years ago, when but 14 delegates were present and $150 was set aside for the same purpose.

Great earnestness and enthusiasm were manifested during the entire convention, and there were 14 conversions during a men's meeting held Sunday afternoon.

Alderman Bracken, representing the Business Men's Association of Bloomington, in an address pledged his most hearty support to an effort to raise money for a new Y. M. C. A. building and invited the delegates to attend its dedication two years hence.

The next state convention will be held at Aurora.

PACKERS PLEAD TO CONSPIRACY

Claim Government Officials
Acted Illegally in Seizing Certain Papers.

ONE MAN CLAIMS EXEMPTION

Having Testified Before the Grand Jury Armour Empire Inlets the Evidence Cannot Be Used Against Him by the Prosecution.

Chicago, dispatch: Right to exemption from prosecution on account of being compelled to give testimony before an investigating body, and the right of freedom from unreasonable search were set up by the packers in their plea to the five counts on the indictment recently sustained by Judge Humphrey. The existence of an injunction, issued by Judge Grosscup, was also used as a special plea.

Three special pleas in bar and a general plea of not guilty were filed.
The first plea sets up that the defendants were required to testify before an examination by the Department of Commerce and Labor with reference to the transactions that have since been alleged as unlawful acts of conspiracy in the indictment. As the defense claims, a violation of the federal laws which protect a witness compelled to testify from being prosecuted on his own statements.

The second plea asserts that on March 12, 1905, Captain Thomas I.
Porter, who is the head of the United States secret service bureau in Chicago,
at the investigation on the indicted persons, district attorney and as his agent, without warrant and by force of arms, seized the papers and records of the Actina Traffic company
and the Oppenheimer Manufacturing company, and that these papers and books were taken before the grand jury then in session and used as evidence in procuring the indictments.
This plea is filed to the third, fifth,
and seventh counts.

Another plea, in which all the defendants unite, sets up that an injunction is in force, issued by Judge Grosscup and upheld by the Supreme court, enjoining the defendants from doing the things with which the indictment charges them.

Samuel A. McRobert, assistant treasurer of Armour & Co., filed a separate plea, in which he claims exemption because he was compelled to testify before the grand jury.

Under a federal statute, it is alleged, no person can be prosecuted if he has been compelled to testify against himself in the case in which he is indicted before the grand jury. This plea is held to be good by many lawyers, and, although it will be vigorously attacked by the government, it is declared there is a likelihood of its quashing of the indictment in the case of McRobert.

The government claims that the seizure of the papers of the Actina and Oppenheimer companies was under a subpoena duces tecum issued to the officials of the First National bank, in whose safety deposit vaults
the records were stored. The records were stored in seven trunks. Six trunks only were seized, and these are now in the new postoffice building.

District Attorney Morrison will require some time to prepare his answer to the questions of fact involved
or his demurrer to the legal points advanced.

THE CHANGE OF LIFE

INTELLIGENT WOMEN PREPARE
Dangers and Pain of This Critical Period Avoided by the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

How many women realize that the most critical period in a woman's existence is the change of life, and that
the change of life is the change of life?
The change of life is the change of life.
The change of life is the change of life.

If her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to appropriation or congestion of any organ, it is at this time likely to become active and, with a host of nervous irritations, make life
a burden.

At this time also cancers and tumors are more likely to begin their destructive work. Such warning symptoms as a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, distension, headache, dizziness, or palpitation of the heart, or irregularities, constipation, debility, or any other of the many ailments which are promptly healed by intelligent women who are approaching the period of life when the change of life is not.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism, and builds up the weakened nervous system as no other medicine can.

Mrs. A. E. Q. Hard of Chattertown, Md., in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham, says:

"I had been suffering with falling of the womb for years and was passing through the change of life. My womb was badly swollen and I had a great deal of pain in my back and was very nervous. I wrote you for advice and commenced treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as you directed, and I am happy to say that I feel much better and my system is now in good health. I have passed safely through the change of life."

For special advice regarding this important period women are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham for advice. It is free and always helpful.

ALCOHOL IN MOST MEDICINES.

Indispensable Requisite in Compounding of Some Prescriptions.

It is of course a well known proprietary medicines contain alcohol and nearly all liquid medicines prescribed by physicians contain it. No honest man will defend the sale of intemperance under the guise of medicine; but every honest man should protest against a system of wholesale denunciation born of malice, or ignorance of pharmaceutical principles, and fostered by selfish interests. It is assumed that alcohol is the cause of im-temperance; but there is a great difference between alcohol and whiskey.
If a substitute for alcohol could be found for use in the manufacture of medicines, its discovery would render a great service to the profession of chemistry and the science of medicine, for alcohol is a very expensive ingredient and a cheaper substitute
would be gladly accepted. Unfortunately the word alcohol, in the minds of many people is associated exclud-
ingly with bar-rooms, drunkenness
and all forms of degradation and vice.
This is due to a lack of knowledge
by the general public of the fact that alcohol is an indispensable requisite
in drugs, tinctures and solid extracts.
All solid extracts and tinctures on the drugstore shelves contain from 20 to 90 per cent of alcohol; and of all liquid medicines prescribed by physicians more than 75 per cent contain
it in large proportions.

Alcohol is required to preserve organic substances from deterioration
and from freezing, and it is also required to dissolve substances not soluble in water, while it contributes to the general palatability of a medicine. Diluted alcohol is largely employed in fluid extracts; and whenever a greater strength of alcohol is required as a solvent (for extracting medicinal principles) the medicine is of such a character as to preclude a large dosage;
and for this reason preparations, even if containing 50 per cent or more of alcohol, are practically less intoxicating than beer. In such cases the character of the medicinal constituents is such as to absolutely forbid the taking of the medicine in any way except in very small doses and at great intervals only. To assume that all great number of proprietary medicines are used as beverages is the veriest absurdity—Exchange.

Favors Barheaded Girls.

The school girls of San Francisco
have taken kindly to the barheaded habit. The school and health authorities accuse them. Dr. Hagen, health officer, says: "By going without hats
the girls are less liable to catarrhal

other numerous ailments the child is exposed to. I am strongly in favor of sending the girls to school without hats. Let the hair be strengthened

Socialism and the Soldier.

In this country Socialists have been urged and even in rare cases intimidated to keep out of the ranks of the militia. This is a more candid method than that advised by the Socialist guides of Europe, where the subject was recently handled by a Frenchman and a German in much the same strain. In a Socialist congress at Jena the German leader of the party, Herr Bebel, who is a member of the German parliament, asserted that the German reserves and landwehr were "Socialists to a man" and said that if called upon to suppress Socialist demonstrations would join the ranks of the volunteers.

Socialists in Germany may have some excuse for confusing their personal with their patriotic interests, for the emperor, who is the head of the army, is himself an officer in this way. But, in lands where the people rule, the soldiers, who are of the people, should stand by their first pledge. They should either avoid the army or be true to its principles. To this view M. Herve, who recently addressed a congress of freethinkers in Paris, would object. He holds that the true religion of the workman is labor and that Socialist recruits should draw their weapons and ammunition and turn them against capital. Men capable of that sort of meanness would be likely to turn on their Socialist comrades at the slightest provocation.

The Alleged Slayer of Custer.

The death recently of Rain-in-the-Face, one of the most desperate as well as the most treacherous of the Indians involved in the massacre of Custer's band in the battle of Little Big Horn, revives the conflicting stories of that memorable tragedy. Rain-in-the-Face boasted that he killed Custer with his own hand. Of all the surviving chiefs he alone spoke bitterly of Custer. He declared that he aroused the Indians under Sitting Bull to give battle because he wanted vengeance on the Custer family for his capture some time before by Captain Tom Custer, brother of the general, who also fell at Little Big Horn.

On one point all the Indian survivors agreed. They described the affair as a melee not lasting more than twenty minutes, the Indians acting under the general order to surround the soldiers and kill them all. Chief Gail declared that he was in command of the party which fired the last shot, and he did not know then that General Custer was on the ground. All of the Indians present in the fight spoke reluctantly of their part in it, with the single exception of Rain-in-the-Face. They were on the warpath and, encountering the troops, fought in their savage way to win. Rain-in-the-Face had the last word, and the story of his treachery has been generally accepted as the truth.

A Friend of Homeless Boys.

Recently there died in London one of the great hearted workers of the slums, who gained the title "Father of Nobody's Children." This was Thomas John Barnardo, who from early manhood to old age looked after the boys who "didn't live nowhere." Over forty years ago Barnardo, then a young physician, became interested in a group of boys of the street who slept in empty packing boxes, on low roofs or in alleyways and saw his life mission among the heathens of London. Dr. Barnardo's plan went far beyond the distributing of charity food and tracts. He founded homes for the homeless and taught them good trades, giving a start in life which is the boy's natural right. He rescued more than 50,000 waifs from the streets of London and also other English cities, where he extended his work, and besides that left a noble legacy in his example of never shirking a duty however dangerous or irksome. He did not seek the mission. It was forced upon him while making professional rounds among the poor of the city during an epidemic.

Excessive Water Drinking.

Dr. K. Beerwald of Berlin is opposed to the free drinking of water so often advised. He says: "Excessive water drinking not only produces temporary disturbance; it also creates direct organic disorders. The heart and kidneys are particularly affected by the excess, and in these organs the vascular system is overcharged and the heart and kidneys overworked. Proof of such a condition is frequently seen in cases of slight injury. A man who suffers frequently from thirst feels chilly, and we may well consider that excessive thirst is a sign that the amount of fluid in the body is not kept within bounds and that this condition must be remedied by opposing the feeling of thirst."

A Good Work Boy.

Mark Twain on his last visit to his birthplace—Hannibal, Mo.—told to the school children a true story about a schoolboy.

"This boy," he said, "awoke one morning very ill. His groans alarmed the household. The doctor was sent for and came posthaste."

"Well," said the doctor as he entered the sickroom, "what is the trouble?"

"A pain in my side," said the boy.

"Any pain in the head?"

"Yes, sir."

"Is the right hand stiff?"

"A little."

"How about the right foot?"

"The doctor winked at the boy's mother."

"Well," he said, "you're pretty sick, but you'll be able to go to school on Monday. Let me see, today is Saturday."

"Is today Saturday?" said the boy in a vexed tone. "I thought it was Friday."

"Half an hour later the boy declared himself healed and got up. Then they packed him off to school, for it was Friday after all."—Philadelphia Record.

The Ghost Quit.

With the aid of the two candles which I lighted I discovered the grate in the wall near the head of the bed, and on examining it closely I perceived that there was a fire in it. The grate would have held quite a double handful of coal if carefully put on; the fire, which seemed to be flickering so feebly had yet had the energy to draw all the warmth of the chamber up the chimney, and I stood shivering in the temperature of a subterranean dungeon. The place instantly gave evidence of being haunted, and the testimony of my nerves on this point was corroborated by the spectral play of the firelight on the ceiling when I blew out my candles in the middle of the night. I woke to the sense of something creeping with a rustling noise over the floor. I rejected the hypothesis of my bed curtain falling into place, though I remembered putting it back that I might have light to read myself down. I knew at once that it was a ghost walking the night there, and walking hand. Suddenly it ceased, and I knew why. It had been frozen out.—W. D. Howells in Harper's Magazine.

The Better Way

The tissues of the throat are inflamed and irritated; you cough, and there is more irritation—more coughing. You take a cough mixture and it eases the irritation—for a while. You take and it cures the cold. That's what is necessary. It soothes the throat because it reduces the irritation; cures the cold because it drives out the inflammation; builds up the weakened tissues because it nourishes them back to their natural strength. That's how Scott's Emulsion deals with a sore throat, a cough, a cold, or bronchitis.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

The Two Kossuths.

The Hungarian, led by Louis Kossuth, who struck for liberty over half a century ago had the hearty sympathy of Americans in that struggle. They were fighting for self government, which was then denied them by Francis Joseph of Austria. Today Francis Kossuth, son of the patriot, is leading a tilt against the aged emperor on quite other grounds than the principle of human right. The Hungarians are now masters of their own country, and it is difficult to understand why they should wish to throw off the authority of a sovereign who has given them all the rights which are their due. The cause of the dispute between Francis Kossuth's party and Francis Joseph is that of the language to be used in the Hungarian army. The emperor insists upon German words of command, and the Hungarians ask for commands in their own Magyar tongue. To the ruler this matter of uniformity of language is the last sign of unity between the two races. It looks as though Francis Joseph may witness a recurrence of the disruption and revolution under which he ascended the throne half a century ago and that the long association of the kingdom of Hungary and the Austrian empire may come to an end during the lifetime of the venerable emperor-king.

The Boycott as Seen in the East. Shanghai comment on the Chinese boycott of American goods is not reassuring for peaceful relations with China. On the one hand it is reported by the English press that anti-American sentiment is spreading, but it is claimed that this is only an incident of the general feeling against all foreigners. One paper declares that the Chinese are very changeable and that the present movement may at any moment be turned into a general agitation against all foreigners.

Outside of the treaty ports the foreigner has never been welcome in China. The Shanghai Times frankly says that there are signs pointing to serious disturbances, involving foreigners, of all nations. This paper asserts that the vicereys are secretly league with the boycotters or else are intimidated by them. Doubtless the triumph of Japan over a powerful and hated white race has intensified the dislike of the yellow men for all whites. The American exclusion law is a convenient pretext for designing leaders to seize upon. When that has lost its force some act of Germany or England may extend the trouble and involve all outsiders.

After experimenting with "age limit" rules the three railroads which first adopted them have abandoned the idea. While it is a good thing to be young, it is also good to keep learning while living on. Some brains at fifty and over are worth more than they ever were under thirty, and there is no room for competition between the various ages. All depends upon the man and not upon the years he has lived.

The twin screw steamer Bremen was recently towed into Halifax with both propellers disabled, a rare occurrence if not an isolated one. The idea of having two propellers is partly to disregard a ship from being totally disabled. In this case the accident which broke the port shaft also disabled the starboard propeller, and the Bremen was in the same plight as a single screw ship would have been under the same circumstances.

Emigration from the famine stricken districts of Spain is toward South America. Hitherto few Spaniards have been found among immigrants, but the recent distress in Spain may increase the number of Spaniards who will choose the United States for their home. They naturally seek the climate of the south.

Two United States army lieutenants have resigned their commissions to accept high rank and pay in the military establishment of China, where they will act as drill masters and instructors in the art of war. Perhaps there is a future "Chinese Gordon" in the pair.

As between political predictions on the side of majorities and predictions of the weather prophet, we pin our faith to the weather prophet.

That Frivolous Miss Bell

By JEANNETTE SCOTT BENTON

Copyright, 1925, by Jeannette Scott Benton

Professor Leigh, the principal of the high school, was in attendance at the school board meeting by request of the board. The principal subject under discussion was the hiring of an assistant Latin teacher in the high school.

"Of course, professor, you understand," the chairman explained, "that the necessity for a new teacher rising as it does in the school year gives us very little choice. The board, however, has decided unanimously upon Miss Daisy Bell, room 7, of the Oak street school. What do you think of her?"

Professor Leigh frowned. "My actual knowledge of Miss Bell's attainments is limited, but she is a frivolous looking young woman. To me she seems a rather impossible Latin teacher. Her name, Daisy Bell, in the faculty would almost lower its level."

He glanced around and caught the covert amusement of his auditors, his lean young face set in stern disapproval. To Professor Leigh life was "real and earnest."

"He writhed under the frivolity and laxity of those latter days. The lightness and love of display shown by the majority of his feminine acquaintances, annoyed him. Various social gatherings, in his opinion, are but only thirty years ago."

"I know," he said stily, "my objection is unusual, but the girls of the high school run to 15 much frivolity themselves. Their teachers should be of another type, if there is any. They even have a way of wearing their hair in a sort of swirl over their faces so that in profile you can barely see the tips of their noses. That Miss Bell wears hers very much the same way."

The board regarded them in stern perplexity. "I confess," the chairman remarked, "that we have not particularly considered Miss Bell's appearance. She graduated last year with unusual Latin recommendations. As for her ability as a teacher, the work in room 7 of the Oak street school is not easy, and she has succeeded in this school, if she is not satisfactory, professor, other arrangements can be made for next year."

The professor arose. "My objections to Miss Bell," he said, "are purely theoretical." He smiled a smile of such entire confidence and good feeling that it was easy to understand his hold on the high school in spite of his priggishness. "And if you say 'try her' I shall do it with confidence in your judgment."

Which was not quite true, for every day his soul ached in disapproval against Miss Daisy Bell. "What could there be in a girl with such a pink and white face fluffed around with such a mop of yellow hair such an impression of frills and fancy things all about her?" He trembled, too, for her influence in the school. The girls seemed so infatuated with her. How could she teach Latin? It was almost against natural law.

Miss Bell grew red and white under his scrutiny in the Latin class, for he came in frequently during the first month's recitations.

At last he was obliged to admit that she could teach Latin fairly well, but he resented it. He hated incognito. She gradually became the trial of his life, and he always tried to make her as inconspicuous as possible. During the annual visitation of teachers he annually stored them away from Daisy Bell's classes. She was a blot on the dignity and high standing of his beloved school. It would shake the confidence of any sensible person to see a girl like that on the staff of teachers.

As for Miss Daisy, she tried her best to please the stern young man. She didn't have any trouble with her classes. The girls were obedient and the boys were good.

But she could not understand Professor Leigh. She envied her hair in its prettiest fashion and worked her hardest in school, but she could not melt his unconquerable disapproval. She trembled for her position the following year. It meant bread and butter and paying what she owed for her course at the university.

In view of this controversy her present bread and butter was of the cheapest, and she turned and pressed and darned her frivolous little frills and smuck a bow here and there in a way that she had to be the best spot that the bright spring sunshine was making so apparent.

It was nearly 8 o'clock one evening when Miss Daisy discovered that by some mischance she had overlooked part of her Latin examination papers. They had to be graded that night, so she threw a little shawl over her shoulders. "I will just run to go over after school," she murmured. She ran across the street to the dark, silent building. The hall looked terribly big and dark, and she fairly flew up the stairs into the Latin recitation room. She lighted several matches and finally succeeded in finding the missing papers. The shadows piled menacingly in the corners, and she was sure she heard a noise somewhere in the building. She fled in a little panic from the room to the stairs. Halfway down she saw some one advancing toward her from the gloom below. She gave a little shriek, then slipped and fell headlong. She heard a smothered exclamation, then some one caught her frantically with terror, she tried to regain her feet.

There, little one, there. Don't be frightened, dear," a voice entreated—Professor Leigh's voice.

In her relief and the reaction she clung to him like a frightened child, half sobbing.

He held her closer, his face almost against hers. "Are you hurt?" he asked anxiously.

Then, after a minute, his clasped relaxed, and she slipped quickly away from him.

"I had no idea it was you," she said dully in a small voice.

"I tried to tell you," he answered softly.

Another moment of silence followed; then the girl sped down the hall and out of the open door.

The professor leaned against the banister and passed his hand over his eyes. A new heaven and a new earth had opened up before him.

He knew now that all his disapproval and condemnation had been a fight against himself, after all. He dared not think now of the stories he had heard of her gallant fight for her university education; how hard she had worked and how he had persecuted her. Poor little thing! And all because he was afraid of himself. What a narrow minded bully he was anyway—and now?

He could not answer that. He went out into the spring night slowly with a beat head. He had forgotten utterly the errand that sent him to the school-house. He even forgot to lock the door.

A very erect, plump checked little assistant Latin teacher and a very self conscious professor came into the assembly room the next morning. Both the professor and Miss Daisy were in a rather bewilderment state of mind.

Miss Daisy shot no more tears in secret over her endangered position. In fact, a little smile was more apt to come. When the professor's eyes met hers there was a look in them that sent the red flushing into her cheeks. Possibly he could call any one "dear" when she fell so lovingly into his arms, but she did not believe it.

So she dreamed those last few spring weeks, while the professor walked miles in his despair.

On the night of commencement they found themselves face to face in a dark little lobby behind the opera house stage.

The professor turned her way. "Miss Daisy," he said enthusiastically, "you are going to the country, are you not? May I come out to see you next week?"

"Yes," she answered softly, extending a small hand. "Goodbye," she half whispered.

He took her hand. "Goodbye," he said. "Goodbye," he repeated. Then he suddenly stopped and kissed her.

"Forgive me," he cried in the depth of contrition, but still holding her fast. "I love you so. You must know it."

"If I love it is pretty nearly telepathy," she murmured.

When the chairman of the board of education asked Professor Leigh if he still had any objection to Miss Bell he hesitated a moment, because the frivolous woman had issued an ultimatum that she would teach until her debts were paid, and his objections from being theoretical had become entirely personal. Still, they were not of nature to be confided to the chairman, so he remarked half heartily that she was a very good teacher and if she wanted the position she could hardly be refused it.

A moment later one of his trickiest juniors thrust her pompadoured little head in the door, then withdrew in confusion at the sight of the chairman, and he smiled quite benevolently after her. The professor was beginning to take a different view of the world and things pertaining to it—things feminine in particular.

HER LADYSHIP'S DIAMONDS

By C. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1926, by P. C. Kistner

Her ladyship's extravagance was a subject of general remark, but it was true that his lordship did not stint her in money matters, and so what she threw away was nobody's business after all. It was so for the first five years of their married life, and then his lordship began to feel the pinch. He delayed saying anything to her of the matter as long as possible, but there came a day when he had to tell her that retrenchment must be the watchword for several years to come. He had figured up her bills and found she had spent more money in a given time than any other woman in the kingdom. In a way he was proud of it, but in another way he had to give her a word of caution. She could still be extravagant and reduce her expenses on one hand.

His lordship held out something too late. Give a wife rein for the first five years, and she will like the bit in her teeth for the next five. Talk of economy should come before instead of after. In addition to gratifying her own many whims and caprices her ladyship had a tendency in the way of another in the camp, both officers, of course, and both lay more or less off her bounty. Only the day before his lordship had asked for a private interview to talk retrenchment, she had sent the naval officer a liberal check to straighten up his debts of honor and been informed by letter that the other one must have a much larger amount or throw up his commission in disgrace.

His lordship's news, therefore, came like a douche of cold water. If there was any sort of scene it was kept from the public, and things seemed to go on as before. They didn't, however. Her ladyship had her diamonds duplicated in paste and raised a large sum on the best gems to help others and herself. This was done quietly and secretly and was only part of a plan she had in her mind.

After the close of the London season his lordship retired to his country estate and was soon followed by a score of invited guests. The astute English robber is always on the watch for these house gatherings. Every woman guest is certain to bring at least a good part of her jewels to wear at dinner, and there are always chances for a smart thief to get in his work. As an officer, the best employs a detective to mix in with the servants or even with the guests for the time being and keep watch over things.

It was on this case, Scotland Yard had loaned him Inspector McDonald, and there never had been a robbery in a country house he was protecting.

The inspector, under another name, mixed with the guests and made his self at home, but he was going to pass much of his time wandering over the estate and musing in the shade of its forests. One of his musing fits was one day interrupted in a rather singular manner.

He was lying on the moss under a spreading beech when the sound of footfalls disturbed him, and he rolled over on his side to discover her ladyship making her furtive way through the woods. At a dozen paces from him she stopped and with a stick dug a hole in the ground at the foot of a tree and concealed something. When she had run away the inspector scooped out the dirt until he came to an old silk bag containing her ladyship's diamonds. The were all there to her last night, and the inspector knew enough about precious stones to know that these were paste.

This happened at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. What her ladyship would do without her diamonds at dinner time the inspector could not determine. Her secret burial of them meant to him simply one thing—she was going to be "robbed" of them. She would have to put up a claim of loss by daylight, and there would be a sensation. Either that or she must be "indisposed" at dinner time and not appear among her guests during the evening.

Her ladyship proceeded at once to business. An hour before dinner, and after all the guests, including the inspector, had been indulging in games on the lawn, she went to her room to discover that her diamonds were missing. There was a sensation at once. No one had seen any strange lurking about, and the robbery must have been perpetrated by some of the servants. Including maids and valets, these numbered over sixty, and each one was obliged to come forward and be investigated. His lordship insisted on the most rigorous examination, and this led to protestations and hard feelings. Within twenty-four hours the household was broken up and scattered, and Inspector McDonald had to admit that he had no clue. The only thing his lordship could do was to offer a reward, and he made it $25,000.

The inspector did not go with the others. He remained behind to look for clues. He held many interviews with his lordship and her ladyship together, and he had to admire the density of the one and the cunning of the other. It was more than cunning. Her ladyship had more nerve and clock than the detective ever before had found in a woman. She was a most convincing liar, and if he hadn't had the past disclosed to his pocket, he would have been inclined to believe that the scene in the woods was a day dream. She could furnish no information as to how her diamonds had disappeared.

She cleared her own mind of suspicion, but would not couch for the honesty of the others. It was through her advice and insistence that his lordship advertised "No questions asked." The stolen plunder could thus be returned by any one her choosing. The $25,000 would get the originals out of pawn and save her brother. The inspector held but one interview with her ladyship alone. At that interview, after she had retold her story and looked him as straight in the eye as a woman could, he said:

"I can't believe that the plunder was carried far. I shouldn't wonder if it was buried in the woods."

"That may be," she innocently replied.

"They didn't happen to be your paste diamonds, while the real gems are in a vault in town?"

"Would his lordship advertise such a reward for paste diamonds? Have you ever heard that I have resorted to paste?"

"I did not mean it in that sense. The reason I spoke of the woods was because I was out there that afternoon."

"I thought I saw a woman prowling around."

"Then you have been deluded as a detective. Why didn't you speak of the matter before?"

"The more I think of it the more I believe that this woman buried something at the foot of a tree."

"Then let me call his lordship, and we will go at once."

When it was too late he saw that she wouldn't take a bluff, and he was obliged to accompany the pair to the woods. He walked straight to the tree and showed them the cavity. He looked straight into the eyes of the woman, but she did not falter in the gaze. He saw by her attitude that she was evenly ready to hear him say that she was the woman he saw and to drag from his pocket the bag of diamonds in corroboration. He dared not put her to the test.

When his lordship criticized his action in not of haunting the unknown woman, the detective could only swallow his chagrin and beg to withdraw from the case. Two hours later he was packed and ready to go. As he was descending the stairs he encountered her ladyship ascending. She gazed straight into his eyes and held out her hand. There was no lie in her blue eyes—she knew the inspector to be above that. He took the bag of diamonds from his pocket and passed it over without a word and then, raising his hat to her, he kept on his way out of doors. Two weeks later a London paper said:

"We are glad to hear that her ladyship's diamonds have been restored to her. It is blotted that the person claiming the reward had the manners of the gentleman, though in disguise."

"One of her brothers, maybe," said Inspector McDonald to himself, as he returned to the case in his book and wrote "Closed" at the bottom.
