The Mother's Meetings Are Gaining in Popularity and Interest

Mrs. A. L. Robertson's Sensible Suggestions.

The mothers held their regular meeting in the Assembly hall of the Barrington Public School Wednesday last week, at 8:30 o'clock p. m. A gratifying interest was shown by those present. The teachers of the school will be very glad to welcome all parents to these meetings. The next meeting will be held January 3. The subject will be "Right and Wrong Punishment," and Miss Goddard will have charge. At the last meeting Mrs. A. L. Robertson read the following able and interesting paper:

Mrs. ROBERTSON'S PAPER.

Christmas, the crowning holiday of all the year, means much to the child of all classes and stations throughout the whole Christian world.

Much to the fathers and mothers, older brothers and sisters, for we are all just grown up children.

What is Christmas? It is a day set apart for the commemoration of the birth of the meek and lowly Jesus, our Saviour, born in a manger at Bethlehem.

December 25th is the day designated in each year as Christmas.

The time when Christmas was first observed is not known definitely, but it is spoken of in the beginning of the third century by Clement of Alexandria and in the latter part of the fourth century Chrysostom speaks of it as of great antiquity.

Many believe that the existence of heathen festivals celebrated on or about this day—Dec. 25—had great influence on its being selected, and the Brumalia, a Roman festival held at the winter solstice, when the sun is at its lowest point, has often been mentioned as having a strong bearing on the question.

Christmas, its meaning and association are taught the child from birth.

What mother is there but sings to her little one the old song "hang up the baby's stocking" on its first Christmas, thereby sowing the seeds of love and happiness that center around this revered holiday.

As the third or fourth anniversary rolls around for the child, what delight he takes in talking of and planning on the coming of dear old Santa Claus.

Papa or mamma must write and tell just what the little son or daughter is most wishing for this year. And, later, when he goes to school and has learned to write, he writes his own letters to Santa.

Shall we or shall we not teach our children to believe in a Santa Claus? There are arguments both for and against. The happiest days of a child's life are those in which he truly believes in a Santa Claus.

You, that were so taught when a child, look back and recall when you discovered that the old white bearded elf with his reindeer and sled was only really papa and mamma. Think how disappointed you were for a time—and somehow things didn't seem half so nice or mysterious as when you expected old Santa to bring your presents down the chimney.

A little child has a vivid imagination—he delights in fairy stories and things that are unreal, consequently their delight in the greatest of all

HISTORY OF PASSION PLAY

It is an Offering of Thanks to God by the Oberammergau People for Delivering Them from a Pestilence.

The Review this week has the pleasure to give its readers a description of the world famous passion play of Oberammergau, a spectacle which has attracted the attention of the world.

Everybody has heard of the "Passion Play of Oberammergau," but many have never had the opportunity of visiting the peaceful little village nestled in the valley of the Bavarian Mountains where is produced the wonder of wonders, the suffering, death and resurrection of Christ. There are about 1400 inhabitants in the village—all simple, honest, pious souls, who dwell in plain, clean homes, far removed from the noise and distractions of the world, and devoted very much to their own education and the improvement of the village.

The people are employed in the art of wood carving, and their wooden images are known almost every market of the world. The custom of performing religious plays and to promise them in a certain measure as atonement to God is very old. The first was written by Bishop Gregory of Antioch (572). In this play is represented the captivity, abuse, judgment, crucifixion and resurrection of Christ. In the 12th century there was hardly a place in Spain, France, Italy, Germany that did not possess its passion play. Through their religious contents and the splendor of the performance they gained an influence and significance that can place them on the same footing with the Greek tragedies. The beginning of the Oberammergau Passion Play was some time previous to the year 1633. There was nothing new introduced in the village, but what existed before was established for the future as a religious duty to be performed every 10 years. The reason of this was that the pestilence which followed close on the thirty year's war, spread rapidly through Bavaria, killing large numbers, until some visitor brought the plague to the Oberammergauers, and in a few days several of the people died. In their distress the villagers made a vow to perform in public the history of the Passion of Christ, every 10 years, in thankful veneration if they should be spared from the pestilence.

Their prayer was heard, and thus they have been faithful in complying with their promise. The evening before the day of the play, the village is crowded with people from all parts, because every tourist in Europe at this time will surely see the Passion Play. Early in the morning everybody goes to church, and at 8 o'clock the crowd of 4000 people is seated in the covered theatre.

The stage is not covered, the performance being given in the open air, by the Mountains as a back ground. The signal for the beginning is given by cannon shots. The overture begins in soft harmonious tones, all is quiet, every eye in excited expectation is turned towards the stage, while behind the curtain the actors prepare by prayer for the coming scenes.

Now the music ceases and the guardian angels step slowly and majestically with a solemn air on the stage—the play begins.

It would be interesting to describe the impression which the play produces on the audience.

Among the thousands of faces there is not one that can entirely disguise the deep impression of this solemn scene. It is this touch of seriousness comes from no religious motives, then it is certainly the pure human feeling of sympathy that is called forth. The first principal part ends with Christ being taken a prisoner. Meanwhile it is noon, and the audience leaves, the theatre, taking one hour and a half for dinner.

At 1:30 o'clock all are again in their places, deep silence pervades the whole assembly and every one looks with growing suspense on the coming Martyr scenes. At last the climax is over and at 5 o'clock in the evening the play is finished. The people leave the theatre quietly and with earnest faces, many being quite overcome by what they have witnessed.

The lecture on the "Passion Play," illustrated with 130 colored pictures will be given in St. Ann's church, Wednesday evening, December 27, 1905, 8 o'clock. Admission, 25c.

Leave your orders at F. W. Stolt's for holly wreaths.

Various business matters were considered by the Y. M. C. A. at their regular business meeting. A boy's department was established. CHAPTER XXIV.

Lang Explores the Tunnel.
As a matter of precaution against eavesdroppers, before entering into the conversation between Dr. Huntington and his daughter, Lang attended to the locking up of the house, and placed the key in the front parlor as a guard, while the trio adjourned to the front room above. Dr. Huntington took a seat in an easy chair with Pearl standing at his back; Louis paced the length of the room several times before speaking; at last he stopped before the doctor's chair.

"Dr. Huntington," said Louis, "when I married your daughter I formed the union as a means of protecting her from harm. Now we find—that is, both of us—that we really love one another. I have sought this interview to request you to consent to our marriage. In reality."

"Is this your wish, Pearl?" asked the doctor, and there was a tinge of sadness in his voice.

"It is, papa," Pearl answered, fondly kissing her parent, and attempting to hide her blushes by resting her head on his shoulder.

The doctor tenderly stroked his child's head for a moment, gazing into her face wistfully; then for a little time buried his face in his hands, sighing deeply. "You are taking an advantage of me," he at last managed to say to Louis.

"I did at first think you a disinterested, honest man, and intended to trust you with more than my life—the honor of my child. You feel, no doubt, the truth—I do not desire a union in fact. But you place me in a position where I cannot refuse."

"I understand you, Dr. Huntington," replied Louis. "You were willing, you are willing, to use me—but you do not think me worthy of filling the true station of husband to your child. Louis had not meant to retort, but the almost blunt refusal cut him to the quick.

Bounded the floor and walls of the cellar for a cleft to the tunnel's entrance.

"Can you blame me," more blandly asked the doctor, "for being the choice of two evils—a possibility that but one evil would exist?"

"No, I do not blame you," acknowledged Lang. "I admit the circum- stance. It is not a pleasant thing for a parent of your social standing to contemplate the union of purity such as your child possesses with a person of my character. But looking at it candidly and from all sides, can you expect to do better? What are your chances for ever leaving this place alive? Besides, have I not truly won her by risking my life to save her from a worse fate? Under the existing state of affairs she is looked upon as my wife—without really being so. Do I not show you that I am honorable?"

"I am not a physician," said the doctor, "serving the sanction of the community making the marriage lawful? Another thing, Dr. Huntington, I have asked your consent coupled with the statement that your daughter loves me. This is an argument in my favor. Still, if you wish to refuse, why do you not say so? I did not demand; by a very simple test you would prove whether I asked for your consent through courtesy or not. Your daughter has trusted me far enough to believe that if you refuse I will yet set the part of a gentleman and not make an undue advantage of any circumstance that may have placed your destinies in my keeping."

"Then I think," said the doctor with great deliberation, "that it is best you do not insist upon marriage with my daughter. You see I am candid with you."

Pearl looked hopelessly at her lover. "Now, as my right, I would ask," Huntington, what are your reasons for refusing me your daughter's hand?" was the business-like question of Lang.

"You understand my motives perfectly, Lang," rejoined the doctor, "valuing trying to appear calm during the trying ordeal. 'Why force me to say something which will distress us both?'"

"Is it of a physical nature?" asked the doctor, refusing to take the hint.

"No; you are physically a model of manhood," said the doctor, enthusiastically.

"Is it on account of poverty? You are not aware, perhaps, that I have a home and several thousand dollars in the bank?"

"Poverty does not enter into the question."

nor appear to notice the repetition of marriage in church. "What do you intend to do?" he asked.

"I mean to turn it to yours and my own advantage," returned Louis. "Circumstances could not have played better into my hands than to have had Schiller approach me in the manner he did. Are you willing to trust me implicitly?"

"I am," the doctor replied. "And leave your daughter's life and happiness in my hands?"

"You do not ask why Schiller made me those propositions," said Louis. "I know," he exclaimed, the doctor. "I am the only living heir to an English estate of great value. If I die it goes to my daughter as the only living representative of a once noble house."

"And the estate is worth?" queried Louis.

"A million!" answered the doctor, promptly.

After the doctor and Pearl had retired for the night, Lang set his wits to work to find some way of circumventing Schiller. A plan had presented itself to the detective, by which it would be possible to delude Schiller into the belief that Dr. Huntington had been disposed of. It depended wholly upon the truth of Golden's statement that there was an entrance to and an exit from the city through a tunnel leading from the haunted house. If the tunnel was still in existence, Lang meant to allow Dr. Huntington to make his escape from the city in that way, furnishing him with a horse and trusting that the doctor would be able to find his way by the first station into the hands of Johnson, who, Louis felt, could be trusted to see the escaping man safely on his way over the border and directed toward civilization. The plan was worth trying at least.

With Lang, to think was to act. As the first thing to be settled was to find out about the tunnel, Lang took a candle and went down into the cellar to get his bearings. Entrance was made through a trap door cut in the floor of the kitchen, and by the aid of a stationary ladder Louis let himself down into the hole which answered the purpose of a storeroom for brick- and cast-iron kitchen furniture. Louis sounded the door and walls of the cellar for a cleft to the tunnel's entrance, but for a long time without success. When about to give up the task as hopeless, a slight gust of wind which had a tendency to blow out the candle led him to the spot, which proved to be a door carefully concealed. Proof of the entrance of the tunnel being thus obtained, Louis postponed further search until better prepared to meet any unexpected emergency which might crop up.

Gov. Long and His "Band."
The Hon. John D. Long of Massachusetts tells with great ease of an experience he had when he was governor. There was a public meeting at one of the theaters, to which the governor and his staff were invited. The staff put on their most gorgeous uniforms. There were quite a number of them, and they were resplendent in gold lace and cord.

When the party reached the theater entrance they found so many people there that they were obliged to enter by the stage door.

They encountered a stolid stage doorman, who had been at his post for years, and was used to the wiles of people who want to get behind the scenes.

"Can't get in here," he said, gruffly. "But," said Mr. Long, "I am the governor."

The doorman looked the governor over carefully. Apparently he recognized him for a moment. "All right, governor, you can go in."

Then he waved his hand at the gaudy staff and announced: "The band must go around the other way."

J. Putnam Bradley's Troubles.
Back in the sixties Goodrich & Dyer were tailors in Joy's building, where the Boston Herald, and the late J. Putnam Bradley was one of their patrons, says a writer in the Boston Herald.

One day he ordered a pair of down trousers, and in due time they were sent to his home.

The next day Mr. Bradley called and said to Mr. Dyer: "These trousers are out with the nap down on the front and up on the back part."

Mr. Dyer, with rare presence of mind, replied: "That is the way we cut them now. You break down the nap, so it looks as if it were more convenient for you."

Mr. Bradley said: "I am glad to know it," and went out.

In the course of time he came in to order another pair, and he said to Mr. Dyer: "If it will not be any great trouble to you, I prefer that nap should run the same way front and back."

OSBORNE AND SMITH ARE FREE
Charge of Conspiracy Not Proved Against Jacksonville Men.

J. H. Osborne and Rev. Thomas P. Smith of Jacksonville were discharged in Justice Martin's court at Chicago after the hearing of charges that they were in a conspiracy to obtain money by false pretenses. Samuel W. Miller, treasurer of the Orinco Mining Company, accused Osborne and Smith of swindling him out of $500 through the National Stock and Bond Guarantee Company. Miller's witnesses failed to substantiate his charges. Osborne is a prominent banker at Jacksonville and Smith formerly was a Methodist minister there.

Plan to Surround Capitol at Springfield With Fire Park.
Gov. Deenen and State Architect Zimmerman have mapped out a plan for beautifying the territory surrounding the state capitol and to provide a site for future state buildings. The citizens of Springfield have been asked to co-operate in the plan.

The plan is to secure possession of six blocks of land extending from Monroe street to Edwards, between Second and Fourth streets, razed the old and unused buildings and convert the territory into a park. The territory is now occupied by the capitol, the executive mansion and the senate, arsenal, and to these buildings would be added the new supreme court building and such other public buildings as the state might provide for the future.

It is also suggested that the city could erect its proposed new city hall within the park. The plan grew out of the discussion over the selection of a site for a new supreme court building. The commissioners are inclined to favor a site directly south of the state house, but there has been some disposition to hold back on account of the price which would be required.

The supreme court justices fearing that they might be criticised for putting too much money into the site. They are able to interest the city in the Ottawa park, and the arrangement can be made by which the state can get enough land for not only this building, but for all public buildings which will be required in the future.

In this connection it is stated that a new executive mansion will be needed within a few years. The old one has been remodeled and rebuilt several times, but it will stand as a creditable residence for the executive at present, most of the private residences in the vicinity excellent in appearance, spaciousness, and comfort.

TUBERCULOSIS CAMP STARTS
Chicago Physician Speaks at Dedication of Tont Colony.

Dr. Frank Billings of Chicago delivered the dedicatory address at the formal opening of the new buildings of the Ottawa Tont colony for the cure of tuberculosis. The colony originated in 1904, when the Illinois State Medical society began an organized campaign against the spread of tuberculosis in this state. Under the auspices of the society Dr. J. W. Pettit began at Ottawa the experiment of treating tubercular patients by housing them in tents. The experiment proved satisfactory, and the colony has been placed on a permanent footing through the efforts of the physicians of the state. Two hundred physicians from Chicago and throughout the state attended the dedicatory exercises, which were presided over by Dr. Harold N. Moyer of Chicago. Another speaker was Dr. Zeller, superintendent of the state hospital for the incurable insane at Bartonsville.

JOLIET SWINDLERS BAG $10,000
Forgers, Aid by Rush of Holiday Trade, Victimize Merchants.

A gang of forgers by rapid work between 8 and 10 o'clock Saturday night swindled Joliet merchants and saloonkeepers out of about $10,000. Taking advantage of the holiday rush they succeeded in getting cashed checks for sums ranging from $20 to $200. The men had in their possession a number of the special checks of the James G. Heggie Boller Company, drawn upon the Joliet National Bank, and a fair counterfeiter of Mr. Heggie's signature on what were apparently cash checks. Helped by the rush of the holiday, the swindlers made easy.

Alberman Nimanish cashed checks for $180 at his saloon. Patrick Barrett cashed a $200 check. Nearly fifty business men reported that they had cashed checks of the same kind. At least four men were in the game. It is believed that the forgers started for Chicago on a late train.

Governor Gives Pivots.
Governor Deenen has announced the appointment of Mary M. Bartelme of Chicago to be public guardian of Cook county.

John Q. Brown of Quincy was appointed public administrator of Adams county.

Willis H. Bennett of Chicago was appointed a director of the First Farmers' society of that city. He succeeded himself.

All the members of the Illinois delegation in congress were appointed delegates to the national rivers and harbors congress to be held in Washington Jan. 15 and 16 next.

Horticulturists Meet.
The fifth annual convention of the Illinois State Horticultural society was held in Elmhurst, Ill., last night, with a large attendance of members from all parts of the state. An especial effort had been made by the officers of the society to secure the attendance of a number of the "guard," since it was the semi-annual meeting, and scores of pioneers were present. Professor J. C. Blair of the University of Illinois addressed the meeting on "The Apple Crop of 1905."

The play is a comedy, and is a dramatic almost exclusively with the great composer's life and its title will be simply "Mozart." A company to back the production has been incorporated in New York City.

Peace and the Underworld.

Although diplomacy has effected a worldwide peace which gives a surface promise of lasting, there are ominous signs of turmoil and discontent in the older civilizations of Europe. Everywhere there is a social rebellion against class and caste distinctions, and small nationalities are renewed aspiration for freedom. The Norwegians split off from Sweden for social rather than political reasons. They say that the Swedes are haughty and domineering. When the Hungarian quarrel came to be settled, it was against the masses against the classes. The petty nations of the Balkans are at war over race privileges.

In Russia the great forces of the country are warring over issues which are social and industrial rather than political, and the Finlanders and Poles are out for complete independence or autonomy. In Germany there is a striking example of the union between social discontent and practical politics. The Socialists are hostile to the state and to the Kaiser, and their leaders, who are in political power, boldly attack the policy of the Kaiser. In France there is for the first time in the history of that republic a solid group of radical Socialist deputies numbering seventeen, and their leader and drill master recently declared that Socialism has no business in politics except to hasten the speeding of capitalism. Another spokesman of this class recently counseled French soldiers to strike in case of war and go home.

As in 1848, there is now all over Europe a spirit of unrest and discontent. Unless there should be a diplomatic war to encourage revolution at home the general peace may not be soon disturbed. The governments are strongly armed, but, if they are not sure of the fidelity of the Socialist troops, may still the storm by granting concessions until the masses get what they seek without a repetition of the scenes of 1848.

Calling a Thief a Thief.

A speaker at the recent meeting of the Maryland Bankers' association, cited as an evidence of the relaxation of moral standards pervading society the general acceptance of the word "grafting" when plain stealing is meant. Whatever the significance of the word graft when it was first introduced into daily speech, everybody knows now that when a man is called a "grafter" the speaker means that he is a thief, but to save appearances or perhaps feelings does not call him so in blunt English.

Originally the word "graft" was widely used to mean money gained under the cover of law or ambiguous law. Prosecution of such cases failed because the shady transaction was shown to be legally warranted even when morally wrong. The offender was called lucky or clever, and thus the moral sense became blunted and weak. The plain thief steals in the face of the law as well as in the face of other people's rights. Only by the subtlest of distinctions can the two kinds of thievery be separated on the moral side, and it might help to state the evil if we would call the embezzling of other people's money under all circumstances simply thievery and leave the finer distinctions to the culprits themselves.

A Virginia farmer recently drew first prize for a pumpkin which he exhibited at the county fair and then sent the yellow wonder to President Roosevelt. Reconstructed "rebel" or not, there is no room for doubt as to the patriotism of a man who would forego the joys of boasting before his neighbors till the pumpkin should fall together, even to have the honor of getting it sampled by the White House revelers.

After all it turns out that Russia's boast that the war in Manchuria was only a side show in her affairs came very near being the truth. During the war she built a thousand miles of railroad across an arid steppe into Persia, which she will now connect with the Transiberian line by building a new road 2,000 miles in length. She has also planned to make the Transiberian a double track route.

VOTED THE CAKE GOOD.

Chicagoans Admit Barrington Baking is Par Excellence

The School Weekly, published in Chicago, had the following interesting account of Prof. Farr's lecture, which was given at the request of the school Entertainment Committee:

"The Saving Grace of Labor" is the title of an interesting illustrated lecture by Charles W. Farr. It was given at Barrington, Ill., recently, and at the close of the program the school children came upon the stage bearing some of their own work. There were ten cakes, a loaf of bread, two plates of cookies, a pumpkin pie, two cans of best pickles, two cans of cherries, one of peaches, two glasses of jelly, two dishcloths, three aprons, three pillows, two hand painted plates, one squash, one pumpkin, two lots of popcorn, some peanuts, two dolls and one "diner" chair. Superintendant of Bania presented this exhibit in harmony with the illustrations given by the lecturer on the work at Tuskaree, and it was the opinion of all present that it is quite as essential to the good of the white child in the grades as to that of the colored man in the institute. It is becoming known among educators that the best thing for children in school is not to keep their noses over books all day every day in the year, but to give them some good book learning and some constructive work which they enjoy and which they can see some practical use in. After the display, cakes and other eatables were cut and passed among the audience. Mr. Farr brought a box of cake to his meeting the next day in Chicago and the teachers there voted that the cake was good and the idea better.

Cuba's Strained Finances. A tendency of the Cuban government to speculate on the revenues of the future is to be noted in the recent message of President Tomas to congress. Cuba has had a prosperous year, her sugar crop showing a difference of $22,000,000 in her favor in comparison with two years ago. The present outlook is that the crop for the coming year will not equal that of its predecessor, yet temporary prosperity has led to measures of national extravagance with no assurance of a revenue large enough to meet the bills. With the new bond issue in preparation Cuba will have a debt of $2,000,000, and in his last message President Palma recommended a huge increase of the rural guard, which is the police force of the island, and also of the diplomatic and consular corps. Large sums are needed for public works and new government buildings. Last year the total taxation exceeded by 25 percent the sum exacted by Spain in the days of oppression. A continuation of the prosperity of last year might enable the young republic to do all that needs to be done and meet every demand, but lower sugar prices or a check to industrial prosperity would carry the nation to the verge of bankruptcy if not over the precipice.

Kay Hill, of Chicago, on the "Passion Play," which was given in the Transfiguration Catholic church last Thursday evening was well attended and proved to be very impressive, as well as instructive and entertaining. To Harness the Storm. It is not natural that the utilization of electricity as a power should lead the minds of bold inventors to the waste of energy in thunderstorms. The energy is all there in concentrated form, and the problem is to harness and control it. A motor has been invented by N. P. Michkine, a Russian, which is at least a step toward the solution of this startling problem. Describing his plan, Mr. Michkine says: "The quantity of electricity stored in the atmosphere may be estimated by the effects sometimes produced by lightning. But clouds that carry electric charges are apt, so to speak, greater centers of accumulation for the electricity which in ordinary weather is spread throughout the atmosphere. We know that electric discharges also manifest themselves by local effects. When a battery of condenser is discharged through a wire of proper size, we may not only heat the wire to redness, but even volatilize it. Thus there are numerous cases of the volatilization of telegraph wires by lightning. The inventor thinks he has perfected a motor which will work with a current of high intensity, but of small volume, the kind of electricity which is in a storm cloud. This is illustrated by the energy of a rifle bullet, which is due to velocity rather than to the mass of lead composing it. The electrical energy of the atmosphere is disclosed by lightning storms attracted the attention of scientists fifty years ago, but at that date no one dreamed of utilizing the mysterious power for the needs of man.

WHERE ENDICOTT FITTED

By

Copyright, 1901, by E. S. McClure

Endicott was a duffer. There was no shadow of doubt about that. He could neither swim nor sail a boat; he played golf in a manner that set his caddy offering suggestions; his dancing was a cross between a prima walk and an awkward skip; he sat on a horse with as much grace as a horse with straddled an elephant. Moreover, his lack of conversational powers had given him a reputation for taciturnity that was far from flattering.

"Why on earth Mrs. Saunders should ask him down for the month I can't see," one of the young women confided to a bronzed young fellow as they sat together in a vine made nook of the broad veranda one evening.

"Oh, that is the easiest part of the equation," he returned. "What sticks me is why the deuce he accepted the invitation." Whereat they both laughed.

"It's the death's head at the feast," said she.

"Oh, he's harmless enough," her companion said easily. "He doesn't attempt to do things unless some one sets him up to it. He'd never have gone in the water this morning if Vandeklen hadn't kept at him for an hour to come along with us. He's game in a way, though. We didn't know he'd get beyond his depth until he was half drowned. Thought he was splashing about for the fun of it. Not a yip did he make."

"IT'S DREADFUL," SHE WAS SAYING. "WHAT IS IT?" ASKED MISS WILMOT.

"It makes you awfully uncomfortable to have such an incompetent person about," said she. "I'm always imagining things when he's late at luncheon or dinner."

"Providence has a watchful eye for a certain class of individuals," said he, and they both laughed once more.

Meanwhile, at the other end of the veranda, Endicott sat on the steps, with Miss Wilmot. If Endicott had been a different sort of chap he would doubtless have made desperate love to the lady. But Endicott knew his limitations, and, therefore, instead of telling her all that was in his heart, he sat beside her on the top step, twirling his hat, watching covertly the changing expressions come and go on her pretty face, and wished most devoutly that he were less of a duffer.

He was a big, heavily built young fellow, with a frank, boyish face and a laugh that was very attractive in its genuineness. If you ever managed to get well enough acquainted with him to hear it, Miss Wilmot had heard it many times when she was alone with him, and it told her much of the real man that lay beneath the awkward reticent exterior.

Just now Endicott's troubled gaze was fixed on some ragged bits of red cloth, the aftermath of a gorgeous sunset.

"I think I shall leave in the morning," he said uneasily.

"But you haven't been here a week yet," she said in surprise.

"I know," said he, "but somehow I don't seem to fit. If a fellow's going to be a success at a house party he should do many things well. Now, I do everything badly. I simply show up everything I enter into and spoil all the fun for the rest."

"Nonsense," she declared.

"It's so," he maintained. "I'm just a duffer pure and simple, and there's an end of it. So long as I stay, of course, out of courtesy to me, they'll drag me into all these things, even if it does spoil their fun."

"You shan't talk so," she said.

"Come, it's time we were getting ready for that moonlight sail."

"If there's so much as a ripple on the water I'm sure to be sick," he observed gloomily. "That makes it very cheerful for the rest."

"You have an attack of pessimism," she laughed as she arose. "Salt water is the best cure in the world for that malady."

"They went down the veranda together. At the door they found Mrs. Saunders talking excitedly to her guests, who were grouped about her.

"It's dreadful," she was saying. "All the servants have left, even to the stable boy, and they're strictly quarantined. Poor Mrs. Browne is frightened nearly to death."

"What is it?" asked Miss Wilmot as they came up.

"Why, the youngest Browne child has diphtheria."

At the door they found Mrs. Saunders. Endicott was stroking his hair thoughtfully.

"Those people that own that new place back by the pines?" he asked.

"Yes," said Mrs. Saunders. "Dreadful, isn't it? Her husband is in the west, and she's nearly frantic. There isn't a soul about here that they can induce to go there."

"When the party started for the pier Endicott stopped up to Miss Wilmot."

"I don't believe I'll go back tomorrow," he whispered. "Perhaps I can fit, after all."

"Of course you can," she said and thought, as one of his words until they had reached the end of the pier. It was then they found Endicott was missing. After much shouting and a hurried search about the immediate vicinity they started out without him.

It was nearly 11 when they returned. Mrs. Saunders met them on the veranda.

"Where do you suppose Ted Endicott has gone?" she cried.

"Where?" chorused several voices.

"To the Browne's. He is going to stay there until they can get a trained nurse from the city."

Endicott stayed even longer than that. He stayed until little Bob Browne died. Then when the quarantine of the house was at an end he came back to the Saunders cottage to get his traps before he went back to town.

The house party made a hero of him. The men spilled him cooling up the path and carried him, protesting loudly, on their shoulders into the hall, where all the other guests assembled. They gave him a round of cheers, and every one wanted to grasp him by his hand first.

Vandeklen made a little speech and told them what the doctor had told him—all about what Endicott had done and how he had held little Bob Browne in his arms the night the child died. They tried to get Endicott to say something about it himself, but he merely reddened up and shifted uneasily from one foot to the other and finally blurted out: "Oh, please! It really wasn't anything."

That evening he sat on the steps with Miss Wilmot. They were quite alone.

"I know you were just like that," she said.

"Like what?" he asked.

"Oh, I know you'd not be found wanting in a crisis," she explained. "And I knew, too, you'd be just as modest about it as you were."

"Any fellow could do that. That wasn't anything," he said uneasily.

"You're a dear, brave boy," she said heartily.

"If I were," he began.

"What would you do?" she asked. Her eyes were twinkling him.

"If I were," he repeated. "I'd—I'd—ask you, oh, hang it! I'm not," he ended in confusion.

"Ted, dear," she said softly, "I'll spare you the asking—and say 'yes' now."

He got for a moment in dumb silence. He could not comprehend it all. Then his eyes lighted wonderfully.

"Thanks," he stammered, "thanks very much." Which was eminently like Endicott.

"Brought up" in College.

One of the most original characters in the Welsh pulpit was the Rev. Lewis Powell, Cardiff. While on a visit to Carmarthen town on one occasion he called at the college, and the students were all for the first time to pay him homage.

"Can I have the help of two of you, my boys, for a minute?" asked Mr. Powell.

"Yes, dear Mr. Powell," answered half a dozen of them at the same time.

"Well, I want two lusty boys, if you please," he remarked, and two of the strongest students were chosen. "Now, my boys," said the old preacher, "let me lay a hand on the shoulder of each of you, and you put your arms around me."

This was done.

"Lift me boys," said Mr. Powell, and the students lifted him until he was head and shoulders above all present in the room. "Thank you, my boys," he remarked. "Let me down now."

This was done. Then one of the boys asked:

"What is the meaning of this, Mr. Powell?"

The answer was: "Well, some people look down on Cardiff in Cardiff because Mr. Powell, the minister, was not brought up in college. I can go back to Cardiff now and tell them that I was raised in Carmarthen college and that I stood higher than all the other students."—London Tit-Bits.

Entertaining and Instructive.

fairies or myths—Santa Claus. A child's imagination should be cultivated; it is a part of his education, and as his little mind increases in knowledge he instinctively comes to distinguish between the real and the unreal.

Some will say "We are teaching our child to be deceptive, and the world today is so full of deception we must guard against it in every way." True in a certain extent; but the seeds of deception were never sown through teaching a Santa Claus, and I believe our children will look back upon their early childhood days when visions of Santa Claus were supreme in their minds—just as one beautiful fairy story that always filled them with joy and happiness.

Every child, young and old, should be thoroughly filled with the spirit of Christmas, which means love and good will toward all, would he attain the joy of a complete and perfect Christmas. How can we teach the child to be filled with the spirit of Christmas? It is his nature to love; he looks to his elders with a simple faith and trustfulness because of love. If we love people we want to give them something. When Jesus was born gifts were given him because the people loved him. Christmas is a time of general thanksgiving and good will throughout the land, therefore appropriate for children to exchange little tokens of love.

The teacher, as well as the parent, is a potent factor in instilling the spirit of Christmas, including right living and right giving, into the heart and mind of the child. Is it not our duty then, as parents and teachers, to strive to live as nearly perfect lives as possible, knowing that the child looks to us as his guide and example?

The little gift fashioned at Christmas time for mother or father, under the careful direction of the teacher, is not counted as to its intrinsic value but for the thought and sentiment that go with it.

Parents, cultivate the spirit of giving in your children—not elaborately or extravagantly or expensively, but a little token of remembrance—an orange, an apple, a picture.

It will take away that selfish feeling in your child; it will beautify his life, and it will fill the life of the other one with joy and happiness, for he knows that the gift came bound in love from the giver. Don't let your child sit down days before Christmas making lists of presents he wants—a sled, pair of skates, candy, etc.; repeating this day after day till Christmas comes.

That is all well and good for a time, for papa and mamma would surely try to please their child in his desires as nearly as possible; but have him make another list, help him to think of some poor little boy or girl that probably won't fare as well as he on Christmas morning—a list like this:

Mary Brown, an orange.

Anna Smith, bag of candy.

It won't cost much, and it will have brightened the life of the giver as well as that of the recipient.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive."

How true it is! And the truly happy are those that experience this feeling.

Then, if we have succeeded in broadening the child's mind, implanting a love and thought for others, and banishing the thought of self alone, in connection with the Christmas, surely, we have accomplished a result which will have its effect and influence upon the whole future life of the child, and the world at large.

Torture of a Preacher.

The story of the torture of Rev. O. D. Moore, pastor of the Baptist church of Harpersville, N. Y., will interest you. He says: "I suffered agonies, because of a persistent cough, resulting from the grip. I had to sleep setting up in bed. I tried many remedies, without relief, until I took Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, which entirely cured my cough, and saved me from consumption. A grand cure for diseased conditions of Throat and Lungs. At Harrington Pharmacy; price 50c and $1.00, guaranteed. Trial bottle free."

All Run Down

THIS is a common expression we hear on every side. Unless there is some organic trouble, the condition can doubtless be remedied. Your doctor is the best adviser. Do not dose yourself with all kinds of advertised remedies—get his opinion. More than likely you need a concentrated fat food to enrich your blood and tone up the system.

Barbers of Barrington have decided to charge 25 cents for cutting the hair of young boys when they want it done on Saturdays. As Saturdays is a very busy day with them, it was very inconvenient for their patrons to have several little boys take up the time of the barbers on Saturdays when they were waiting. The price for boy's hair cutting will remain 15 cents on every day except Saturday, or if they must have it done on Saturdays they will have to pay an extra 10 cents.

The third lecture of the popular Monday evening lectures in the Methodist church was given last Monday evening by Dr. William B. Pierce. The subject of "The Man Like You: Mother's Way" had evidently aroused the curiosity of the people of Barrington and a large audience turned out to hear the lecture. Their curiosity was more than satisfied and all who attended felt that this one lecture was worth all the expense and trouble of working up the whole course of lectures. The people of Barrington would be a good way to hear Dr. Pierce lecture again.

Mrs. FRED WISEMAN AND CHILDREN.

RECEIVED MANY FRIENDS.

Rev. and Mrs. Nate are recipients of many friends.

Rev. and Mrs. John Nate of 1819 N. Sawyer Ave., Chicago, celebrated the golden anniversary of their marriage at their home on Wednesday, Dec. 6th, from three until ten o'clock.

During the reception hours nearly one hundred friends and relatives called to offer their congratulations, and many telegrams and letters of a congratulatory nature were received from prominent Methodists from abroad among them being letters from Bishops McCabe and Vincent.

A number of the Chicago pastors were present, and Rev. J. P. Brushingham presented to the couple a purse of gold from the Chicago Methodist Preachers' Meeting. A pleasant incident of the occasion was the presence of Mrs. Elizabeth Ross of Chicago, who was one of Mrs. Nate's bridesmaids at the wedding fifty years ago.

which occurred at the old Leonard home on Rush Street. Many tokens begetting the occasion were presented to Rev. and Mrs. Nate and the parties were filled with beautiful floral offerings sent by old time friends. The five children and the grandchildren assisted in receiving the guests. They included J. J. Nate, of Minneapolis; Mrs. M. N. Strickland, of Mattoon; Mr. J. C. McIntosh, of Barrington; Mr. Rev. Joseph C. Nate, of Boardman, Ill.; Dr. R. J. Nate, of Chicago and six grandchildren. During the reception a "golden wedding" luncheon was served from a handsomely appointed table in the dining room. Johnson of Chicago and Rhodes of Barrington served.
