

Anthem in Which Americans All Join

Oh! say, can you see, by the dawn's early light,
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight last gloaming;
Whose broad stripes and bright stars through the perilous fight—
O'er the ramparts we watched—were so gallantly streaming;
And the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air,
Gave proof thro' the night that our flag was still there.
Oh! say, does that star-spangled banner still wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?

Washington's Sad Fourth of July

Day Witnessed His Surrender of Fort Necessity to the French.

It was the 4th day of July, 1754, 22 years before the Declaration of Independence made the day ever famous.

The light of early morning shone upon a strange scene in the wilderness of western Pennsylvania.

A force of 600 Frenchmen and 100 Indians was camped around a rude stockade. Little by little the French, not far from the present city of Pittsburgh, were being commanded by Coulon de Villiers, a young Frenchman, the commandant of Fort Duquesne, who had sworn vengeance against the English for the death of his brother, Jumonville, who had fallen in a skirmish a few days before. De Villiers was pleased to find the French beat that no English dare should wave west of the Alleghenies.

In the fort a little force numbering less than half the number of the French and Indians had held out for one long day and six hours of the night against the attack of their vengeful and overpowering foes.

Before we relate the story of Fort Necessity, however, it will be well to refer to the causes which led to this Fourth of July episode.

At the commencement of the French and Indian war it was determined by the English, for the better protection of their interests, to build a fort at the junction of the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers, on the present site of Pittsburgh. A body of troops was accordingly dispatched by Gov. Dinwiddie of Virginia to accomplish this object.

The death of their colonel on the march threw the command into the hands of the second officer, a tall Virginian of 22, with brown hair and gray eyes, whose gravity of manner and courageous appearance bespoke even then the greatness he was to win. This Virginian youth was George Washington.

Before he reached the goal of his journey, Washington learned from his scouts the fatality of his errand. Instead of driving out the French, he and his command stood in a fair way of being themselves driven out, if not altogether annihilated.

The English were improving the summer weather. They had captured the few English and built and manned a strong fortress at the very place where the English expected to build one, and a French and Indian force of more than 1,000 men was thronging the adjacent forest.

When within a day or three of the new fort Washington had named Fort Necessity, after the Virginia Cods, Washington halted at a place called the Great Meadows and constructed a fortification of logs and earth, throwing up with his own hands the first shovelful of soil.

To this rude stockade he gave the name of Fort Necessity. In it were placed the cannons which he had dragged with great toil through the forest paths from Virginia.

On the 4th of the faithful Shawnee chief found the enemy's trail, and in the darkness of a rainy night the English made a successful raid. Jumonville, the French leader, was killed, and several of his men fell prisoners into Washington's hands.

After a few days' rest, Washington went forward with a portion of his force to the Shawnee chief, the King. A council was held and it was determined to make a night attack upon the French.

PURE FOOD BILL O. K.

CONFEREES REACH AGREEMENT ON MEASURE.

BASED ON THE HOUSE DRAFT

Provides for Fine and Imprisonment for Violation of the Act, Which Forbids Adulteration or Misbranding of Articles.

Washington.—The pure food bill was agreed upon by the conferees for the senate and house. The house bill was taken as a basis of agreement, and then were grafted many of the important sections of the senate measure.

Two provisions of the house bill were eliminated. They were the sections which authorized the secretary of agriculture to fix the standards of the various articles of food as to the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of the various preservatives, and which would compel the person selling drugs or articles of food to furnish samples of such product for the purposes of analysis.

The bill as agreed upon makes it a misdemeanor for any person to manufacture, sell or offer for sale any article of food, drugs, medicines, or liquors which is adulterated or misbranded, or which contains any poisonous or deleterious substance. It prescribes for each offense a fine not to exceed $500, one year's imprisonment, or both, and for each subsequent offense a fine not less than $1,000 or one year's imprisonment.

The term misbranded applies to food or drugs whose package or label bears any statement, design or device false or misleading, or if falsely branded as to place where manufactured, or to the quality. Any label, however, which does not contain any added poisons or deleterious ingredients shall not be deemed adulterated or misbranded when known under its distinctive name or if compounds, imitations or blends are plainly indicated. The term "blend" is construed to mean a mixture of like substances and does not exclude harmless coloring or flavoring ingredients.

Dealers are protected against prosecution if they hold the guaranty of the concern from which they purchased the article.

Washington spent his single day of respite in strengthening his rampart, and on the 2d of July his scouts brought intelligence of the advance of the French.

Meanwhile the French and Indians, under the command of Coulon de Villiers, were holding a grand powwow at Fort Duquesne. The "French father" had supplied his children liberally with dreams and the whereabouts of the English and Indians.

The braves after consuming several oysters and drinking two barrels of wine, had expressed their willingness to march against the English and drive them across the Alleghenies.

De Villiers set out on this expedition. The way through the forest was a difficult one, and before they reached Fort Necessity rain began to fall heavily. But the French pressed on, and before noon of the 3d of July they were firing upon Washington's defences.

Their position was such, being upon higher ground, on two slight elevations, and well sheltered by trees and bushes, that they could cross their fire upon the fort and enfilade a portion of it, without themselves being exposed to much injury from the English.

At a little after nine o'clock in the evening the French commander called out for a parley. Washington's fear of treachery led him to ignore the proposal at first, but his position was so desperate that he complied the second time.

Capt. Vanbraam, a Dutchman, the only person in his troop who could talk French, was sent to De Villier's camp.

After a long preliminary talk the Frenchman wrote his terms of surrender. During the night of a pine, the rain dropped spattering upon the paper and rendering the writing almost illegible.

The terms permitted Washington and his men to march out with the honors of war, retaining their arms, stores and baggage.

Washington signed the paper between midnight and one o'clock, and the rest of the night passed quietly, though the men remained under arms.

At dawn of the Fourth of July the Great Meadows presented an animated scene. The camp was bright with fire and the sun shone brightly over the damp, green forests and the lofty ridge of Laurel Hill.

The horses and cattle belonging to the garrison had all been killed, and, burdened by the sick and wounded, whom they carried on their backs, the English were obliged to leave most of their baggage and cannons behind.

Washington had all the men of his force who had been killed or wounded, buried in the ground, and then, having shrouded his dead in the skins of the animals he had brought with him, he and his command started for Wills Creek, the nearest English station, 52 miles over the Alleghenies.

Sad must have been the heart of Washington as he surveyed the scene. All his hopes of military glory seemed blighted in the bud, but whatever may have been his feelings, no word of complaint or anger escaped his lips.

Washington, however, was the darkest and most miserable morning in his life.

He could not foresee the future, but on that other day, when the bell on the state house at Philadelphia was proclaiming the Declaration of Independence far and wide, and jubilant crowds were shouting and throwing up their hats at the glad tidings there.

Washington, however, thought of the time when he left the walls of Fort Necessity, a defeated man and a fugitive.—Golden Days.

WHAT JOY THEY BRING TO EVERY HOME

as with joyous hearts and smiling faces they romp and play—when in health—and how conducive to health the games in which they indulge, the outdoor life they enjoy, the cleanly, regular habits they should be taught to form and the wholesome diet of which they should partake. How tenderly their health should be preserved, not by constant medication, but by careful avoidance of every medicine of an injurious or objectionable nature, and if at any time a remedial agent is required, to assist nature, only those of known excellence should be used; remedies which are pure and wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, like the pleasant laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. Syrup of Figs has come into general favor in many millions of well informed families, whose estimate of its quality and excellence is based upon personal knowledge and use.

Syrup of Figs has also met with the approval of physicians generally, because they know it is wholesome, simple and gentle in its action. We inform all reputable physicians as to the medicinal principles of Syrup of Figs, obtained by an original method, from certain plants known to them to be most beneficially and presented in an agreeable syrup in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to promote the pleasant taste; therefore it is not a secret remedy and hence we are free to refer to all well informed physicians, who do not approve of patent medicines and never favor indiscriminate self-medication.

Please to remember and teach your children also that the genuine Syrup of Figs always has the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package and that it is for sale in bottles of one size only. If any dealer offers any other than the regular Fifty cent size, or having printed thereon the name of any other company, do not accept it. If you fail to get the genuine you will not get its beneficial effects. Every family should always have a bottle on hand, as it is equally beneficial for the parents and the children, whenever a laxative remedy is required.

A "Plain an' Pinted" Duty That Was Not to Be Misunderstood.

Feasting and Starving In Japan.

Nearly a million people have perished of hunger in Japan during the last year, according to the East Asian, a journal of Berlin, edited by a Japanese. The three provinces of Miyagi, Fukushima and Iwate have been most severely afflicted, and earnest appeals are being made for help. The emperor and empress of Japan as well as many of the most prominent people in social and commercial circles are contributing, but, as the Japan Weekly Chronicle says:

Great as these individual contributions are, they are only sufficient to give very temporary relief to 380,000 persons, the number of whom is increasing daily as the absolutely starving condition increases. Several days ago the public was told that a bill would be introduced in the Diet to give "immediate" relief, a word that will surely be bitter irony to the thousands of unfortunate peasants who are now starving and dying for lack of food. The bill, it is promised them, is to give relief measures that will act as a stimulus to the authorities, by the newspapers of Tokyo and the provinces and by private committees, Japanese and foreign.

NOTES FROM THE SUMMER RESORTS.

Noble Conception.

As the result of the disinterested effort of David Lubin, a citizen of San Francisco, the king of Italy has invited the nations of the world to send representatives to a conference, to be held at Rome, to consider the propriety of creating an international institute of agriculture—and if so decided, to organize such an institute with clearly defined objects, authority and duties as set forth in the protocol which will be the basis of the deliberations of the conference. Mr. Lubin, says the Chronicle, of that city, is a gentleman of keen intellect and broad views, and his original proposal contemplated for the proposed institute a scope of activity and of authority in connection with them which seemed to most of us too broad to be even subjects of discussion, as practical measures, by the present generation, and to be necessarily postponed for serious consideration until the good time coming comes. What Mr. Lubin may hope for the future, however, has nothing whatever to do with the propositions of the official protocol of the Italian government, which include only measures selected from Mr. Lubin's broad outline, and of which all contemplate action easily possible at once, highly important and extremely useful. The work proposed for the institute of agriculture is simply the collection and distribution, by international cooperation of the current agricultural data of the world. These data include information respecting crop, labor, prices, freights, discovered inventions and trade.

It is a proposal to put the producers, consumers and middlemen of the world on equal terms in respect to information of current events calculated to affect markets of agricultural products so far as human ingenuity and resources can accomplish it. It is stated that 30 nations, including our own, have notified the Italian government of adherence to its proposals, in so far as to promise representation at the conference. So much is required by international comity, and acceptance to that extent was within the customary exercise of the presidential authority and carries with it a moral obligation on the part of congress to provide for the expenses of the delegates and upon the president, thereafter, to make the necessary appointments. The final acceptance of the conclusions of the conference and their incorporation into our national or international polity is of course an entirely different matter, to be determined, either now or hereafter, by the president and congress, or the president and senate, according to the nature of the conclusions and the forms in which they may be presented for action.

Many practices which ten years ago, five years ago, one year ago, and even six months ago were in favor, public opinion having no condemnation for them, are now held to be odious and even criminal. This is perhaps the most notable development of the day, namely, the creation of a higher standard for the conduct of American business. The revelations of graft in the insurance and railroad companies are a shock to national pride and yet there is hardly an American who does not know that in one form or another graft has entered largely into the corporate life as into the political life of the country. The saving clause of the situation is that it seems a passing phase in our national progress. The optimist has reason to rejoice that the national conscience has been touched and that public opinion is establishing higher ideals.

In some ways the recent conference on international arbitration at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., was an unusually democratic gathering. Here is a circumstance illustrating this statement. One morning a summer visitor was passing the rounds of the big hotel when a tall, heavy man was approached. "Can you give me a light?" said the visitor. The big man handed over a match, whereupon the other said: "How tall are you?" "Six feet four inches," was the reply. "How safe, that's a good cigar you smoke," was the next remark. "Yes, it is," said the big man. "Let me offer you one out of the same box." The visitor accepted gladly and had one more query. "By the way, who are you?" "I am Dr. McVickar, bishop of Rhode Island," replied the heavy weight, who apparently hugely enjoyed the incident.

Newspapers are printing the customary summer stories of crowds of visitors from this country flocking to Europe and overrunning the hotels and public places. The treasury statistics show that about 150,000 Americans go to Europe every year and the estimated expenditure of this army of visitors is $1,000,000, so that European hotel owners, stokers, transportation companies and other purveyors to sightseers receive about $150,000,000 annually from the overbearing American pocket.

"Mine Host Roosevelt Is Doing Everything in His Power to Add to the Attractiveness and Popularity of His Establishment."—News Item.

WORK ACCOMPLISHED BY CONGRESS; IMPORTANT LEGISLATION ENACTED

Washington.—Important measures extending federal regulation and control have been enacted at the first session of the fifty-ninth congress, now rapidly drawing to a close.

The railroad rate and the meat inspection bills will soon become laws, and before adjournment of congress both houses will have passed pure food bills which, though dissimilar in terms, are not based on the same principle of federal control.

The intention is to enact at least these differences before adjournment.

There has been no marked division on party lines in effecting the above results, the differences being only as to ways and means rather than as to policy.

Besides branching off into this new field of legislative endeavor, the president has succeeded in its execution of his important in other ways. It has added one, and perhaps two new states to the union and by so doing has disposed of four territories.

Great results to the people are expected from the removal of the tax on denatured alcohol, and if predictions are fulfilled, heat, light and power are to be supplied by alcohol made from the corncobs of the country, from sugar beets and sugar cane, from fruits and other vegetation.

By a deft turn of legislative points of view, the questions which have perplexed congress for some time regarding the Panama canal have been settled. The president may dig a lock canal as he pleases. A joint resolution was agreed to requiring canal supplies to be made of American manufacture.

Congress has not dwelt with the foreign situation to any extent. An act making a much needed reorganization of the consular service was passed. Nothing was done in the Santo Domingo controversy and the legislation affecting our commercial protection was unimportant, although a tariff revision for the Philippines received the attention and approval of the house, and an act was passed revising the tariff collected by the Philippine government. A colleague act for the islands also was passed.

A large number of bills were introduced in the two houses. The calendar reads: "In the house, 1,000 bills have reached nearly 25,000, 500 more than were introduced during the entire three sessions of the last congress.

Before discussing the number of acts passed, it is interesting to note that with all the strenuous exertions of an appropriations committee in the house, with a new chairman—Representative Tawney—it has been impossible to hold the appropriations down to much less than $900,000,000, although "economy" was the watchword from the start.

Although there has been an effort to prevent the enlargement of what is known as the "permanent annual appropriations," this character of expense has increased during the session to the extent of nearly $5,000,000, making the total passed $940,000,000. As it happened, the increase in this appropriation came in one day in the house. The meat inspection bill carried a permanent annual appropriation of $2,000,000, and the same day the house passed the bill adding $1,000,000.

Michigan Centenarian Dead. Grand Haven, Mich.—Mrs. Elizabeth Dunbar is dead in the county infirmary aged 108. She was born in Antrim county, Ireland, and when 15 years of age witnessed the battle of Ballynahinch in County Down, Ireland.

to a like amount annually for the support of the state militia. Measures were introduced on which action will be pressed at the next session to repeal a portion of the permanent annual appropriations of the government.

Organized labor has succeeded in its request of the present session of congress to the extent of securing the enactment of what is known as the employmentability bill. This enactment makes possible on the same principle of federal control.

"You stubborn person. Really, I know all about myself. I asked you to tell me all about yourself."

"And I began to once to tell you everything about myself—everything of interest—which is yourself."

"I see your values of values is gone, poor man. I shall question you. Now you are a miner, and like men of action, men who do things; I've often wondered about you, and seriously, I'm glad to find you here doing some things. I remembered you kindly, with real gratitude, indeed. You didn't seem like a New York man either, and I decided you weren't. Honestly, I am glad to find you here at your work in your miner's clothes. You mustn't think, for we forget how to value men that way."

On the point of saying thoughtless-ly: "But I'm not working here—I own the mine," he checked himself. Instead he began a defense of the man who doesn't work, but who could if he had to. "For example," he continued, "here we are at a place that you must be carried over; otherwise you'd have to wade through a foot of water or go around that long way we've come. I've rubber boots on, and so I pick you up this way." He held her lightly on his arm and she steadied herself with a hand behind his shoulder.

"And staggering painfully under my burden, I wade out to the middle of this subterranean lake." He stopped. "You see, I've learned to do things. I could pick you up from that slippery street and put you in your carriage, and I can pick you up now without wasting words about it."

"But you're wasting time—hurry, please—and, anyway, you're a miner and used to such things."

He remained standing. "But I'm not wasting time, and I'm not a miner in the sense you mean. I own this mine, and I suppose for the most part I'm the sort of man you seem to have gotten tired of the man who doesn't have to do anything. Even now I'm this close to work only because my grandfather wanted me to look over the properties my father left."

"But, hurry, please, and set me down."

"Not until I warn you that I'm just as apt to do things as the kind of man you thought I was. This is twice I've picked you up now. Look out for me—next time I may not put you down at all."

She gave a low little laugh, denoting untroubled serenity. She was gazing secretly in his strength, and she knew his boldness and timidity were still justly balanced. And there was the rather astonishing fit of news he had just given her. That needed a lot of consideration.

With sure, sure-footed steps he reached the farner side of the water and put her on her feet.

"There, I thought I'd reveal the distressing truth about myself while I had you at my mercy."

"I might have suspected, but I gave the name no thought. Bines, to be sure. You are the son of the Bines who died some months ago. I heard Mr. Shepler and my father talking about some of your mining properties. Mr. Shepler thought the 'One Girl' was such a funny name for your father to give a mine."

Now they neared the foot of the shaft, where the rest of the party seemed to await them. As they came up Percival felt himself in the presence of that sentimental legend that left him all but dismasted.

The father glowered at him and asked questions in the high key we are apt to adopt in addressing foreigners, in the instinctive fallacy that any language can be understood by anyone if it be spoken loudly enough. The mother's manner was a crushing rebuke to the young man for his audacity. The father's manner was meant to intimate that natives of the region in which they were then adventuring were not worthy of rebuke, save such general rebukes as may be conveyed by disowning one's native propensity of manner.

The other members of the party, including Shepler, who talked with Pangborn at a little distance, took cue from the Millbrys and aggressively ignored the abductor of an only daughter. They talked over, around and through him, as only may those mortals whom it has pleased heaven to have born within certain areas on Manhattan Island.

"I shall see you soon above ground, shall I not?" Miss Millbrey had asked, at which her mother shot Percival a parting volley from her rapid-fire longbow, while her father turned upon him a back whose sidelines were really admirable, considerate, and apt and feeding habits.

The behavior of these people seemed to intensify the anxiety of their child. The two solemn young men who remained continued to chat before Percival as they would have chatted before the valet of either.

He began to sound the spiritual an-gush of a pariah. Also to feel truculent and, in his own phrase, "westy." With him "westy" meant that you were as good as anyone else "and it came to a show-down." He was not a little mortified to find how easy it was for him to fall back upon that old cushion of provincial arrogance. It was all right for Uncle Peter, but for himself—well, it proved that he was less truly eastern than he had imagined.

Mr. Milbrey described with minute and loving particularity the preparation of asseus de Faisan, avec beurre au champagne.

Mrs. Dremler declared that she meant to have Uncle Peter Bines at one of the great feasts the very first time he should come to New York, and that if he didn't let her know of his coming she would be offended.

Oldaker related an incident of the ball given to the prince of Wales, traveling as Baron Renfrew, on the evening of October 12, 1860, in which his father had figured briefly before the royal guest to the abiding credit of American tact and gentility.

Shepler was amused until he became sleepy, whereupon he extended the freedom of his castle to his guests and retired to his stateroom.

Uncle Peter took a final shot at Oldaker. He was observed to be laughing and indeed laughing right then.

"He didn't help 'slickers' over their fine of God's own country. He thinks God's own country is a little strip of an island with a row of well-fed folks up and down the middle, and a lot of hungry folks on each side. Hebe he's right. I'll be bound, he needs the love of God. But if it is His own country, it don't make Him any less a son of man with me like some new sunrise that the stupid astronauts hadn't predicted."

"You see," he went on, after a moment, "I don't ask what you think of me. You couldn't think anything much as yet, but there's something about this whole affair, our meeting and all, that makes me think it's going to be symmetrical in the end. I know it won't end here. I'll tell you one way western men learn. They learn not to be afraid to want things out of their reach, and they will be devoured if you want them. It's good to often think if you want a thing hard enough and keep wanting it, nothing can keep it away from you."

A bell had been tinkling nearer and nearer on the road ahead. Now a heavy wagon, piled with sacks of ore, came into view, drawn by four mules. As they stood aside to let it pass he scanned her face for any sign it might show, but he could see no more than a look of interest for the brawny driver of the wagon, shouting merrily to his straining team.

"You're rather inscrutable," he said, as they resumed the road.

lighted cigarettes with the men. The talk had grown less truculently sectional. The Angsteds twins told of their late fishing trip to Lake St. John for salmon, of projected tours to British Columbia for mountain sheep, and to Manitoba for elk and moose.

quite appreciate what a great old fellow he is."

"I admire Uncle Peter much more. I'm sure, than he admires me. He's afraid I'm not strong enough to admire that eastern climate of yours—social and moral."

"I suppose it's natural for you to wish to go. You'd be bored here, would you not? You couldn't stay in these mountains and be such a man as your grandfather. And yet there might be so much to do here; it's all so fresh and young, lively. Really, I've grown enthusiastic about it."

"Ah, what think that there is in the east—and you are there. To think that for six months I've treasured every little memory of you—such a funny little lot as—they were—to think that this morning I awoke thinking of you, yet hardly hoping ever to see you, and to think that for half the night we had ridden so near each other in sleep, and there was no sign or signal word. And then to think you should burst upon me like some new sunrise that the stupid astronauts hadn't predicted."

"You see," he went on, after a moment, "I don't ask what you think of me. At the surface a pleasant shock was in store for him. There stood the well-bred, tolerant smile that royal New Yorkers reserve for all such visitors from their empire. Then he politely asked Uncle Peter to show Mrs. Dremler and himself through the stamp mill.

At Percival's suggestion of a walk, Miss Millbrey was delighted.

After an inspection of the Bines line, in which Oldaker declared he would be willing to live forever, if it could be anchored firmly in Madison square, the party separated.

Out into the clear air, already cooling under the slanting rays of the sun, the young man and the girl went together, holding hands, with the escort of a little mining camp, with the wooden shanties on either side of the railroad track. Down this street Uncle Peter had gone, leading his charges toward the busy ant hill on the mountain side. Ahead the track wound up the canyon, cunningly following the tortuous course of the little river to be sure of practicable grades. On the farther side of the river a mountain road paralleled the railway. Up this road the two went, followed by a playful admittance from Mrs. Millbrey: "Remember, Mr. Bines, I place my child in your care."

Percival was more conscientious about his charge and insisted at once upon being assured that Miss Millbrey would not be afraid to ride the wagon.

"You can ride the wagon stock.

"I'm always above of gittin' there. I'm not afraid to ride the wagon stock."

"I'm afraid you'll be afraid to ride the wagon stock."

The Old Department of the Illinois Children's Home and Aid Society, with headquarters at 19 Dearborn St., Chicago, will be glad to hear from families in town or country who are willing to receive young Chicago school children (mostly boys) into their homes during vacation, as guests or helpers. As these are the children of poor mothers who have to work away from home to support them, they need such temporary home advantages as now urgently sought by the Society. Many of the boys are old enough to be of some assistance on the farm; the girls in the household. For some a small amount, perhaps $5.00 per month can be paid by the parents. The offer of such home privileges during vacation is a direct and practical charity to the children involved, and it is suggested that families respond to this notice specify the age and sex of the child preferred, and whether some pay is required. Please write promptly to the Superintendent of the Aid Department, 50 above address.
