HUGE RAILWAY BRIDGE

Longest and Heaviest Steel One
In the World.

TO SPAN THE EAST RIVER.

Artistic Structure at New York Will Link New England and the East.

Four Tracks, Two For Passenger and Two For Freight Service.

Plans for the huge East river bridge of the New York Connecting railroad were filed recently with the municipal art commission for its approval. In accordance with the provisions of the charter granted to the company, says the New York Tribune, the new bridge will surpass all ever built or planned to cross the East river and will be the longest and heaviest steel bridge in the world.

First of all the bridge to meet the eye of the passenger from the sound three miles from now, it will sweep in a graceful curve over Hell Gate. Wards Island, Little Hell Gate, Randall's island and the Bronx kills.

When it is completed and the last spike driven in the four railroad tracks to cross it, for the first time there will be an all rail route through New York between New England and the south.

Until the completion of the missing transit link the trains, as heretofore, will have to be carried down the East river and across the harbor. Although these ferries, with the tide in their favor, easily take an elevated train from One Hundred and Twenty-ninth street to the Battery, the all rail connection will save five to four and a half or more and much trouble.

Besides designing a bridge to be of more than needful strength, the company has sought to build one the appearance of which will be in accord with the increasing demand for artistically impressive structures. It has been designed by Gustav Lindenthal, with whom was associated Henry Hornbostel as consulting architect.

Huge arches will be erected on the islands over which the bridge passes, and the work of construction will proceed from these foci in the same manner as the work on the Blackwell's island cantilever.

There will be a steel arch span of more than a thousand feet across the turbulent Hell Gate between abutments. The abutments will be monumental stone towers, dividing the bridge proper from the steel viaduct which forms the approaches. They will be of granite at the base and molded concrete above, reaching up some 200 feet. They will contain various small rooms needed for the operation of the railroad.

The tracks themselves will be 140 feet above high water, five feet higher than on the other East river bridges. They will pass through steel arches, which will rise 120 feet higher. Some of the steel members of these arches will be blue steel in diameter and weigh a hundred tons each. Eighty thousand tons of steel will be used in the construction of the bridge.

The carrying capacity of the new bridge will be about twenty times greater than that of the old Brooklyn bridge, or of other long lines of the heaviest freight locomotives.

Of the four tracks two will be for passenger and two for freight service. The passenger tracks will be of a cut-off in Queens county will connect with the Pennsylvania railroad tunnels and its central station at Thirty-third street and Seventh avenue, Manhattan, and

The Long Island railroad and its shore resorts and city stations and all of these lines, with the New York, New Haven and Hartford and other New England lines. The freight tracks will run across Queens and with the Long Island railroad will form a big loop around Brooklyn. Through freight from New England for the south and west will be carried over this route and across New York bay from Bay Ridge to Greenville, N. J. Thus there will be two distinct routes for the two classes of traffic, and neither will interfere with the other.
