ROADMAKING TEST.

Advantage of Slotted Rolled Earth as an Element in Permanence.

At Benoit, Platt county, Mo., a road making experiment is in progress which will be watched with much interest.

It is conducted under the direction of the state highway commission and is intended to demonstrate the advantage of the highly compacted earth as an element in the permanency of the roads.

A stretch of road a half mile or more in length was excavated to a depth of twenty feet and the sides of the excavation were cut at the height desired for the roadway, and thus the road consists of a body of earth nearly or quite two feet thick compacted as firmly as it is possible for a roller to compact it.

Now, the theory is that if this road is thoroughly drained, so that it cannot be undermined by water, and be covered down on the top with a drag wherever it is wet from rain it will shed the water on the top and be a permanent road.

Next week Mrs. John Robertson gives a musical and afternoon tea.
