ding state, but Illinois is the first to give it official endorsement. We are glad of the opportunity to congratulate our state on this advanced legislation and feel satisfied that the splendid example set by Illinois will be followed in a short time in all states where coal is mined and are convinced that as a result of the adoption of this law a better and more efficient class of labor will ultimately be employed in the coal mines of the country."

Labor Legislation.
The report of the miners' legislative committee has the following to say concerning labor legislation of the Forty-Fifth General Assembly:

"It is a matter of regret that the element in control of the machinery of the house was actuated more by a desire to wreak vengeance on certain men than to make possible the passage of meritorious legislation. From a general labor standpoint the factory inspection bill, introduced early in the session, was the most important because of the multitude of people such legislation would affect. Following the failure of that measure, the governor secured the passage of a joint resolution providing for the appointment by him of a commission to report to the next general assembly the draft of a bill designated to more fully protect our factory workers. This course practically assures that the necessary legislation in this respect will be enacted during the Forty-Sixth General Assembly, which will convene next January.

"One of the chief measures in the history of labor legislation passed by organized workmen was that known as house bill 72. The bill had for its purpose the removal of the unjust rule applied by the courts of this state known as the fellow servant law, or doctrine of common employment. Under the operation of this rule it is impossible for any injured workman to recover damages if the accident was caused by the act of a co-employee. "The bill was unanimously reported from the judiciary committee of the house with the recommendation that it do pass. It reached the order of third reading on the calendar, but on account of the speaker's opposition to it, died there.

"While we are disappointed over the defeat of some labor measures, we are all acts of vital interest were passed. Notably the law creating a department of factory inspection and providing, in addition to the chief and assistant for twenty-five deputy factory inspectors, thus assuring a more efficient inspection and a stricter enforcement of present factory regulations.

Report of Injuries.
An act approved May 24, 1907, in force July 1, 1907, requires that every employer of labor in this state shall report to the bureau of labor statistics every serious injury entailing a loss of thirty or more days' time, or death of every employed caused by accident while in the performance of any duty or service to such employer. It is made the duty of the bureau of labor statistics to classify all such accidents into trades or kinds of employment and cause the same to be published for the information of the public.

"An act was approved June 20, 1907, in force July 1, 1907, providing for the protection and safety of persons in and about the construction, repairing and alteration of buildings and other structures. This law was passed by the general assembly at the request particularly of the structural ironworkers' union, supplemented by the request of the employers of all building trades."

Support of Governor Deneen.
In closing their report the miners had the following to say concerning the support they received from the labor union:
"During the several years this committee has waited on the legislature we have learned much concerning the influence of the labor union. We are not only labor, but all other legislation in the interest of the people.

"By virtue of our having relations with those who have to do with the making and enforcement of laws we have come to know who are our real friends. While limited space will not permit us to record the names of all, we can not close this statement without mentioning particularly the part taken by his excellency, Governor Charles S. Deneen. Without his earnest and active co-operation our labors would have failed.

"The value of this friendship is enhanced when the fact is remembered that in respect to most of the legislation secured, some of his personal and political associates presented the other side, while at all times the attorney of the corporations were persistent in their arguments that the laws enacted were unconstitutional and on those grounds pleaded with him to exercise his veto power.

Holds Advanced Position.
The governor has taken an advanced position in regard to industrial legislation. He was satisfied that the laws requested by the coal miners, many of which were enacted during his administration, were needed, that they tended to throw additional safeguards around the dangerous occupation of coal mining, and in the interest not alone of the twenty men who had employment in this industry in Illinois, but in behalf of a better society, has been and is committed to such a legislative policy and to that end has thrown the influence of his great office in line with prospective laws.

"It is one of the most hopeful signs of our day when men like Governor Deneen, holding high responsible positions of trust in our state government, are not only able, but what is more, willing to co-operate in the great work of economic emancipation."
