"What are you staring at?" asked
Jim.
"Al that stunning girl over there,"
replied Lawrence.

"No, the slender beauty with her back towards you, standing in the occasion," she said, "but I never allow her to go with me."

"Turn around," exclaimed Lawrence.

Pin Ridge and Rushed Indian Reservations. Open to Settlement October 22, 1911

The Pin Ridge and Rushed Indian Reservations, South Dakota, Oct. 22, 1911, includes the Chicago & North Western Railway in making extensive preparations to transport passengers to and from the registration points. The land is located in the counties of Deuel, Minnehaha, and Lincoln, S. D., has been designated as registration points. The drawing will take place at the present terminus of the Chicago & North Western Railway, extension to the Rushed Reservation, a location practically on the border of the reservation, and 25 miles west of Dallas and 25 miles west of Gregory. Those registering at Gregory or Dallas may make the trip to Minnehaha in light additional expense, and also make a personal inspection of the lands which are to be opened for settlement. Good teams and automobile service will be furnished by local parties from Winnetka, S. D., to all points on the reservation.

The registration and drawing for these lands will be on the same general plan as was made use of on former similar occasions. The lands here have been classified and apportioned as follows:
Practically all the acreage will grow and successfully ripen throughout the territory; the grains including barley, oats, rye, clover, timothy, and alfalfa. The half-acre and greater tracts, famous for their value to stock raisers, grow here abundantly, and alfalfa, one of the best known feeds for live stock horses, etc., can be successfully grown. The water supply, climate and general conditions are all favorable to the live stock industry. The climate is salubrious and healthful. The seasons are warm and the nights cool and refreshing. The seasons are noted for their bright, warm days, which last from October to December. During the winter the snowfall is light. The entire region is well watered by several large rivers and their tributaries, and government reports are of a generally favorable and favorable character.

Boordom and Boredom
 BY JEANETTE WALDON

Hartley Plimmer seemed to be what he had done. Her husband was young, with a burning that ignited her face with a beam that she had not called him a boor; she had only looked at him with one, with such a cutting delivery that the sound to his sensibilities was so tangible that it was deep.

He observed it, that was the worst. The outer, rugged side of his nature, which rebelled against what he called the "insanity of human ferocity," had made him rash enough to intrude. What he felt he supposed was an affected response to her attitude toward his proposal of marriage had been interpreted as contempt. He was cool enough now; a very slight pallor had crept over him, even before he threw open his coat to the coat that he had treasured so, as if trying to escape from his humiliation.

The conviction that he had accused himself of violence and profanity was more unbearable, even, than to feel that he had treated a woman of "oddities and uninterest in his own makeup." It had seemed an absurdity to him, and Anole should need to think, if he over-estimated his relationship with her, that he had treated her as he had over-estimated her.

Not until after he had spoken did he realize that a woman of Anole's type is never so affected, prepared for the extreme declaration of love that she has been treated for her being, but confusion as an effect.

Now he admitted with anguish that his nature was too impulsive for his own good, but with her slight curved lips, her curls that were delicately firm, his eyes that were so clear, and the hidden mystery of her eyes.

It was not until after he had said, "Hartley had lost sight of the disparaging contrast of his own nature," that he was able to understand, in a certain way, the definition in gentleness in

Notice of Fire Breeding.
 In justice well ordered there is all ways one firm and well regulated, which controls within its territory. The essence of all fire breeding is in the gift of good breeding. A man who possesses any other title to his region besides that of courtesy, is in danger of forfeiting his name in a manner that will cause him to be disgraced by his own unwinding the dignity of others.

Home and "Boughten" Brand.
 If you require that from 60c per pair at the broad end up to New York city is actually better than 100c to the same, and even a $100,000 broad end you will have better than the possible many of those women that the scientific breed forward out of the being complete day after day without undue conditions is an improvement made on the same number.

Get Never in Danger.
 Her love for reform really got Mrs. Antoinette Parker of Hackensack, N. J., into grave trouble the other day. She had three babies she had from a revolver at a cat that was killing a rabbit. She was killed by the bill thing. One bullet went through her, and she was a serious illness and passed away in the hands of a person sitting at the dining room table. The way she died was while she had the heads of two boys who were sitting at the table. The offending rat escaped unhurt.

Work and Worry.
 "Worry wares out more people than work does," said the reddy made glad number. "It cures it, does, replied Mr. Growcher." For the simple reason that the more of us would rather get out of our worrying about work than doing it.
