ILLINOIS VS. IRRIGATED LANDS.

rernment authorities send out to the inty press a few columns of interestmatter regarding irrigation, the irrigated states, and the vast sum that the government is spending in

sch projects.

Irrigation is a wonderful work of course, and by its use many acres of otherwise worthless lands have been nade tillable and profit producing, but we do not see the wisdom of exploiting before residents of such a community as surrounds Barrington the great values of far away farm lands when those lands, with all the cultivation and irrigation, do not equal our own Many northern Illinois farmers who have heard so much about the productiveness of the firrigated states will probably be surprised to learn that an acre of corn, wheat, oats, barley, rye or flax is of greater value here than in the irrigated states; and the farmer hereabouts does not have to buy water nor lead it around in little rubber boots and a bad temper.

nparing Illinois' 1911 crop with that of Colorado and taking the Decem-ber farm values as shown by the United States crop reporter the aggregate value of an acre each of the above mentioned crops is more than $14 greater in Illinois than in Colo-

Kind of Woman That Women Like Best

by DR. GRACE E. CHOSS

It would be a difficult test indeed to epitomise in one type the kind of woman particular in the properties of the properties of the properties of different individual way, but a woman's choice of different individual way, but a woman's choice of the constant in the phases of her own devulon changes with the phases of her own devulon changes with the phases of her own devulon changes with the phase wit

The protective or maternal element naturally belongs to a woman's maturer life. It reaches out to what is weaker than herself. To one who mature life. It reaches out to what is weaker than herself. To one who needs help the gladly gives herself, and in the giving comes to love the object of the repiritual bounty. Necessary as it this type of friendship to the ethical economy of the race, danger larks therein. There are some somes in whom the primitive instinct of self-sacrifice has not yet given way to the same individualism which counts it wrong to submerge one own personality in the vain effort to live another's life. It is well to add and export, that it is assential that a string youman't freedablip for a weaker one shall neither 'eventuset in futile self-sacrifice nor degenerate line are most affected by the self-sacrifice to red degenerate. into a mere satisfaction in flattering
