San Juan del Sur, Nicaragua, Aug. 22.—News dispatches reaching this city Tuesday from Managua tell of the massacre of 430 members of the federal garrison at San Juan del Sur by rebels under General Mena.

The massacre at Leon was a horrible example of savagery. The insurgents attacked the city in the morning and after a long engagement the government forces, greatly outnumbered, surrendered. THE WORK THAT LASTS.

The work of the quiet, conscientious man does not cease when death stills his heart. He has planned too carefully and wrought too conscientiously for his unselfish labors to pass into oblivion. The world has need of his services and often benefits by them long after his race is run. He may not have made much impression in his lifetime, but for all that he built to the best of his ability and to future generations his work is of enduring value. The quiet worker is never exploited by his fellow-men. Indeed, there are some persons who hold in contempt the man who does not make a stir in the world, says the Chicago News and Courier. It is not always the quality of the work that counts, but rather its spectacular effects. That these effects soon wear away and leave exposed the rough surfaces cannot be questioned, and then it is that men turn with confidence to the results of the unobtrusive, dependable worker, who strives with his heart, as well as with his hands. In a recent article on the subject the writer says of the quiet worker that he builds for eternity, and that eternally alone can discover the fine finish of his workmanship. We can take a piece of furniture, and paint on it as brilliant a gloss as we wish for, but it will not be long before these brilliant varnishes and shows in all its ugliness the painted wood beneath. On the other hand, the fine finish which the master workman gives to the article he is restoring is attained only after the most honest and painstaking efforts, which he directs not to the attainment of immediate final results, but to results which lead gradually to the beautiful finish which crowns his work.

The colony of lepers on the island of Molokai in the Hawaiian group is again called to the attention of the outside world by the end of the century. Brother Ira Dutton has been stricken with leprosy. Ira Barnes Dutton was born at Stowe, Vt., in 1842, and is, therefore, in his sixty-ninth year. He went west before the Civil War, and when that broke out he enlisted in the square cadets of Zanesville, Wis. Before the war ended he became a captain, and was known as Captain Dutton until he became a member of the Dominican order. Brother Dutton is the last of the pioneer nurses who volunteered to care for the lepers at Molokai, where they were segregated by Father Damien. He has done his duty well, and now that he has been stricken with the dread disease, it can easily be believed that the report is true that he is facing death with the same bravery that was shown by his predecessor, the more widely known Father Damien. To be brave in battle, as Captain Dutton proved himself to be, is one thing; to face death from exposure to an insidious and lingering disease, and that, too, the same bravery that was shown by his predecessor, the more widely known Father Damien. To be brave in battle, as Captain Dutton proved himself to be, is one thing; to face death from exposure to an insidious and lingering disease, and that, too, the same bravery that was shown by his predecessor, the more widely known Father Damien.

And how police of Berlin have engaged in a successful battle with robbers who adopted the methods of the Paris Apaches. Both this and the recent escape of Paris criminals who took refuge in a house which was carried by assault with firearms, recall the encounter in London in which Winston Churchill figured. It is worthy of note that in all three instances the fugitives from justice failed to escape.

A London paper describes this episode as a "rainy party." The weather there must have been something extraordinary to drive men to what makes sense out of this.

BIG CASES INCREASE

State's Litigation Grows Into Huge Proportions.

Hasty Review of Some of Most Important of Great Suits Tried During Recent Years in Illinois.

"What's in that trunk?" repeated the old attaché of the attorney general's department to the questioner, viewing a large, heavily bound case in the center of an office floor. "The records of a case ready to ship to some court," he laconically replied. "I don't know where it will end. When I came to this office, we could carry the records of our biggest cases around in our pockets. Now we have to express them in trunks. This isn't anything unusual nowadays," and he tugged at the trunk to move it into a corner.

The last few years have been remarkable for the number of big cases which the state has instituted or defended through the gamut of court procedure.

Just a Few of Them.

Let's take up briefly just a few of those that have developed during the term of Attorney General Stead.

One of the first things he did was to cut out in the infancy a form of avoidance which promised to become prolific because of its air of respectability. The Continental Finance company was a partnership affair soliciting money for investment purposes. Its literature indicated that it depended upon the lapses and forfeitures of its contract holders for its profits. Mr. Stead proceeded against the concern. The court's decision was that this company was carrying on an illegal banking, money loaning and investment business.

Strengthened Inheritance Tax Law. The assembly having passed an act prohibiting trust companies, banks, insurance companies and corporations to transfer the personal property of a decedent without a permit from the attorney general was attacked by the National Safe Deposit company in a suit against the state treasurer. Mr. Stead defended the law and the court's decision upheld the act.

Abolishes Habeas Corpus Mill. The habeas corpus mill, as it came to be known in Cook county, was broken up by Attorney General Stead when he made a determined effort to stop the liberation by lower courts of prisoners from Joliet and Chester prisons on mere technicalities and flimsy excuses after the supreme court had decided they had been legally tried and convicted.

The Famous Joyce Case. The Joyce case is one of the most celebrated in the administration of Attorney General Stead. Joseph A. Joyce alleged that his rearrest for violation of his parole from Joliet prison was unconstitutional. In February, 1910, the court decided that the parole law of 1899 was invalid. This decision threatened a wholesale liberation of prisoners on parole. Attorney General Stead appreciated the chaos that would ensue, petitioned for a rehearing, and with new evidence and authority the court reversed its decision.

The Two-Cent Fare Law. The Forty-fifth general assembly made two cents per mile the maximum passenger fare in this state. The rail roads opposed it. One of the weaker of their number having gone into receivers' hands attacked the law. The attorney general has defended the law. The case is in the federal courts pending a decision.

The right of the trustees of a drainage district to destroy a navigable body of water is denied by the supreme court in what is known as the Spring Lake case. This large body of water, it was proposed to drain off. Mr. Stead filed an injunction which the supreme court granted.

The Auditor's Cases. Under the registered bond law, the auditor and treasurer had, for thirty years, been claiming as their own, the fees paid by municipalities for the collecting by the state of interest and principal on bonded indebtedness. General Stead was called upon to prosecute suits for the recovery of these funds. The supreme court held that the fees belong to the state. Up to the present time $180,772 has been collected; judgment for $40,968 has been obtained, making a total of $241,740 collected or to be collected. The remainder, it is expected, will be collected in due time.

Submerged Land Litigation. In conjunction with the state's attorney of Cook county, Mr. Stead has instituted five suits to recover made lands along the shores of Lake Michigan in Chicago. The last general assembly created a department in his office to deal exclusively with the recovery of submerged lands from unlawful holders.

The Kashaska Commons case was notable for its historical interest. As a result of this litigation a large amount of property has been recovered for the Kashaska school.

The act of the last general assembly compelling all state boards and officers to turn their fees into the state treasury was attacked by the Chicago Board of Trade, because it interfered with the inspection of grain. The court upheld the act which had been defended by Attorney General Stead.

Improvvised

By JOANNA SINGLE

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary

Because it was a moonlit summer evening and they were young, happy and courageous, they bore the infliction of Billy's music without throwing things at him. They liked Billy so much that even his joyous rendition of "Juanita" in a sweet but hardly accurate tenor voice to the twang of his guitar was received with patience, albeit neither man nor girl on the wide, cushion-strewn veranda ceased talking or laughing or flirting. They knew Billy would not expect that even from guests.

Billy looked out on the little lake to a boat that drifted in the white path made by the moon on the water, and wondered what James Strafford was saying to Stella. The wonder made him so wrought that he began an agonizing improvisation on the "Spanish Cavalier" with one of his guitar strings a bit flat. Then he noticed that Norma Main had come near to him, the only silent one there, sitting on the top step, her fair head on her hands, her elbows on the railing.

It struck him that Norma, poor child, needed comfort, too. By some sixth sense he knew that Jimmy should in decency be saying to her whatever he was saying to Stella. He pondered miserably as to the reason Stella might have for suddenly evading him, Billy, and being ceaselessly with the other man. She knew, too, that Norma and Strafford were lovers, if not actually engaged. That made her behavior worse.

Then, to relieve his own pain, and add to that of those who had to listen, he sang "The Spanish Cavalier," and then "In Old Madrid," and then "Juanita" over again. He knew only the three songs, which was fortunate, for had he known another he would have rendered that also. As it was, he finally put down the long-suffering instrument and tried to talk with Norma.

The girl answered briefly in such a queer, half-choked little voice that he Tried Not to See Norma as a Bride.

Instinctively shielded her from the observation of the others by starting a great chatter of his own, and asking her to walk with him. Without a word she sauntered beside him down to the beach. He took her hand and put it on his arm. He had known her from childhood, and despite his hurt about Stella, he would not see Norma unhappy if he could help it. He talked on, and until he actually heard a distinct little sob from the girl he ignored her evident unhappiness, as he thought she would wish.

"Look here, Norma," he said, "I won't have you miserable. Can I do anything? Do you mind telling me what is the trouble?"

"Oh, don't pretend you don't know. It's dear of you, Billy, but you know perfectly well how miserable I am. And you know why. I could kill Stella Morrow—I hate her as—"

"As I love her, Norma. She acts as if she were bewitched. She has not stopped flirting with Strafford from the minute he came out here. And I had mother ask him just for you. I meant well. And I thought she was beginning to care for me—she acted as if she did. What do you suppose she has?"

"I don't like to tell you," she said slowly, and he turned to look at her profile in the moonlight, and at the slim, well-carved figure. "It's simple catfishness. She's getting even with me. You never knew that there's always been a silly feeling between us from the kindergarten up—some childish jealousy. I was done with it ages ago, but I took honors in high school when she didn't, and it's too foolish to tell, but I'll tell you. Last winter Mrs. Vincent gave a dance for Paul Forsythe—you weren't here. You know he's a sort of notable, English, and awfully good looking. He seemed to take a great fancy to me—got more dances than I should have given him. Well, he begged to sit one out, and we did. The awful part is that we were having such a really jolly time that we sat out two dances. The last happened to be Stella's. She was furious. Of course, it was awful of him, but she never forgave me. Of course it was my fault! She told—made she'd get even, if it took all her life."

but I didn't suppose she'd try to break things up between Jimmy and me."

"He doesn't deserve you, Norma," began Billy angrily, and then remembered that he was criticizing Stella as well, he was silent awhile.

"I can't understand women's vanity, Norma, and I wouldn't believe this of her from anyone but you. You're too good a little friend and too truthful not to be believed. Let's help each other out. Does anyone but me know how you feel about Strafford?"

She shook her head. "Not a soul! I've been so ashamed of flirting with Jerry Peters just to hide my real feelings! I'll stop or go straight home—"

"You'll stay right here! Going would be a confession. Tell you, Norma, let's stay right by each other. You flirt with me—and I'll flirt with you, and we won't mind what anyone thinks. It may bring those two people to time. What do you say?" The girl nodded, but her heart was sore that James Strafford would yield to the aggressive, sparkling, almost malicious fascinations of Stella the moment she brieled them on. Billy was a comfort, and she told him so. They went back to the others.

The next few weeks saw a queer change in the affairs of the dozen young people, most of them out at Billy's summer home for a couple of months. Billy and Norma were always together inseparable.

As Strafford saw Norma so oblivious of him, he began to think of her more and more, wondering if Stella was, after all, the one girl for him! One morning he asked Norma for a walk, but she told him sweetly enough that she was golfing with Billy that day. No, she wouldn't go out on the lake in the evening—Billy wanted her to learn a new song.

Behind them stood Stella, a queer look on her plump, brown little face. Sauntering off to the garden, she managed to run against Billy—she was sweet and appealing and meek. She hadn't seen anything of him, he was so busy with his bride, but she would be glad when he wasn't so busy. She dimpled and sparkled, he did self to him, but somehow he could not rise to the old ready adoration of the girl. Loyal himself, he loved loyalty in another. It was not that he couldn't forgive, but he saw a lack of quality in her. She, to satisfy mere vanity, had hurt him, hurt Norma—and perhaps Strafford. Billy was grave. Courteously enough, he led her back to the lake and started with Norma for the links.

On the veranda Strafford also was looking after them. Stella turned to him with a queer little laugh.

"Quite a case, don't you think, Jimmy?" He frowned. Suddenly he didn't like her to call him "Jimmy," though he had begged her to do so not very long before. Neither did he like the light tone about Norma. He made some excuse and sauntered away by himself with his pipe.

Out on the links Billy and Norma golfed and laughed. They had sought comfort and had found it.

It was the evening that followed that Stella made a discovery. Billy and Norma had walked out on the moonlit beach and sat together on the sand watching a stiff breeze send the waves lapping up at the shore line. Billy put his arm over Norma's shoulder with a loving little movement.

A light laugh made them both start, but instinctively Billy kept his arm where it was. They looked up and saw Stella and Strafford, the latter walking unwillingly as though he wished he were elsewhere. Stella laughed again.

"What a charming little scene! I hope we do interrupt? It's real or just improvvised, Romeo?" She addressed Billy and was answered by him.

"Norma and I are real people—we don't improvise on a theme like—love. It's real. Isn't it, Norma?"

She nodded. Suddenly she knew what she and Billy loved each other deeply and sweetly, and that these other people and their little jealousies and weaknesses meant nothing to either of them. But there was still enough feminine malice in the girl to make her ask sweetly of Stella:

"And you? Am I to wish you—"

Strafford broke in rather angrily: "Don't be absurd! Stella doesn't enjoy that any more than I do, and you know it! Won't you and Billy come back to the house with us?"

Having put himself on record, Strafford knew Stella would expect no more of him. What did she deserve? He told himself that everything was her fault. Hang girls, anyhow! He made for the smoking room and his worst old pipe at the first possible moment. He leaned back and savoring rings, and tried not to see Norma as a bride. That was a little too much for Strafford at that time.

Peculiar Albanian Duels. Albanians used to practice a peculiar form of dueling. Sir Richard Burton, who once commanded a corps of horsemen, writes that "the Albanian contingent, who generally fight when they are drunk, had a peculiar style of monomachy. The principals, attended by their seconds and by all their friends, stood close opposite, each holding a cocked pistol in his right hand and a glass of raki, or spirit of wheat, in the left. The first to drain his draft had the right to fire, and generally blazed away with fatal effect. It would have been useless to discuss the practice, but I insisted on fair play."

Not Always. "Causes may be known by their effects." "How about rich food producing a poor appetite?"

HARD FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

It's hard enough to keep house if in perfect health, but a woman who is weak, tired and suffering all the time with an aching back has a heavy burden to carry. Any woman in this condition has good cause to suspect kidney trouble, especially if the kidney action seems disordered at all. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women suffering in this way. It is the best recommended special kidney remedy.

A good little story, long current in England, is just now gaining American circulation. It has for leading characters Rudyard Kipling and Dorothy Drew. HOW TO MAKE BEAUTIFUL LAWNS IN RURAL COMMUNITIES AND ON FARMS

Starting a Lawn, University of Illinois.

The photograph shows a protective crop of oats. After the oats are cut as shown in the foreground, the well started lawn grass is master of the situation.

By E. P. HERMANN,
Student, University of Illinois.

Beautiful lawns are rightful heritage of those who dwell in rural communities and on the farm. They are not only artistic and social assets to the farmer, but they have economic and practical value as well as many who take pride in a beautiful home-stand will testify. The amount of time and care necessary to start and keep up a lawn is exaggerated in the minds of many farmers, but whatever its cost, the pleasure and satisfaction it affords more than repay.

The quickest way to prepare a lawn, other than by the transfer of sod, is by means of protective crop, such as oats, sown with the grass seed. If oats are to be used as the cover crop, they are sown on the rough plowed ground before a fine seed bed is prepared. About a bushel to the acre is enough to produce the grain necessary. The oats may be sown broadcast or drilled. After the oats are in, the ground should be thoroughly prepared by harrowing and dishing until the soil is as fine and smooth as possible. Preparing a seed in this way serves a double purpose. It covers the oats and prepares the way for the grass seed, which should be sown broadcast or drilled. The proportion of two to one, and to each one hundred pounds of this mixture five pounds of white clover seed is added. The blue grass will produce the permanent lawn, while the red clover will permit of even setting and packing of the stage against the sides. Such a wall will not detract from the feeding quality of the stage by absorbing moisture to any appreciable degree, nor will it permit of the entrance of air to start mold and with care at filling time this silo will produce as good a product as can be obtained in the stave silo.

A porous wall may often be remedied by the application of a wash of rich cement applied with a large brush. If the wall is rough a coat of cement plaster may be required. Some have obtained good results by using asphalt paint.

Another question often raised is that of a proper door. Metal door jams are to be avoided, also metal cross ties in continuous doorways. A much more substantial structure can be built with openings about 22 inches by 22 inches, or longer if preferred, placed not over 24 inches apart. This narrow opening permits the carrying of the reinforcement entirely around the silo, and is not a serious hindrance in feeding. Galvanized, heavy gaged sheet metal may be used for doors, or the doors may be made of two thicknesses of flooring laid crosswise with tar paper between them. The door should fit into the opening against the jam so that it is flush with the inner surface of the wall. The use of felt or similar preparations about the door is not to be encouraged. Good results have been obtained where metal doors are used by sealing about the outer edge of the opening with soap.

SILOS OF MASONRY OR SOLID CONCRETE

By R. E. BRAND,
Associate in Dairy Husbandry, University of Illinois.

It is no longer the question of "Shall I have a silo?" that confronts the stockman, but rather, "What kind of a silo shall I erect?" There has been a widespread feeling that masonry silos do not interfere the quality of the silage as well as the stave silo does. This opinion, in many cases, has been based on direct comparisons that have warranted such conclusions, but the cause has not been considered. In such a case, the stave silo must have been in good condition, and the masonry structure, if apparently perfect, must have had improperly finished walls. The prime essential of a silo is that it keep silage in the best possible form for feeding. This requires a practically impervious, smoothly finished, true inner surface, failure to secure which has caused dissatisfaction.

The masonry concrete silo has been open to just such criticisms on these points, and has suffered in popularity because of the unskilled or thoughtless labor frequently used in such apparently simple construction. A porous wall often results from the use of too dry a mixture or one of uneven composition. The concrete should be wet enough to run readily from the trance of air to start mold and with care at filling time this silo will produce as good a product as can be obtained in the stave silo.

WILLING HE SHOULD GO FAR

One Man to Move Kid, Transferred, but He May Have Had a Grudge.

"What do you think of this scheme of having the country exchange children?" asked the Sewickley man. "I don't think anything about it," said the Wilkinsburg man. "What is the idea?"

"An English family, for instance, exchanges children for a couple of years with a German family. References are first exchanged and all that sort of thing."

"I see."

"Thus both sets of children get a chance to learn another language and get acquainted with another country. It's quite a scheme."

"It's an elegant scheme," declared the Wilkinsburg man. "My neighbors have a kid that I would like to see exchanged with some family in Siberia."

"The oats will grow very rapidly compared to the grass and will afford excellent shade and protection. The grass will become firmly rooted by the time the oats are to be cut for summer hay. This may be done just before the oats head or after heading if not delayed too long. The grass is then well started and will be able to hold its own. By the next season the grass will have the upper hand and the oats will be crowded out."

Regular cutting improves a well-stated lawn greatly if care is taken not to cut too closely in a very dry time. It will be beneficial to leave the cutting on the lawn occasionally as a mulch. The clippings are greatly appreciated by poultry, both when freshly cut and when cured for winter feed.

Care should be taken at the start that the seed of the dandelion or other weeds do not obtain control before the grass, but after the start no so much vigilance is necessary. Going over the ground occasionally with a roller will be beneficial.

Legs raw with itching, burning eczema

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 21, 1912—"A friend of mine had big red blotches from all over his legs, body and arms. It was pronounced a very bad case of eczema. After two months' treatment he was suffering untold tortures, and would awake at night and find himself scratching, with hands all over blood. His legs were like a piece of raw meat, itching and burning. For two months he slept scarcely any, but would get up and walk the floor. He says he simply felt as if he were burning up. After the case had lasted six months he began the use of Reston Soap and Ointment. He cured himself, and his skin was as clear as crystal."

W. A. U. CHICAGO, NO. 24-1912.

Work of Cloth.
The influence of clothes must come to be, as it has been from the beginning of history, either "sacred or profane," a foremost factor in those forces by which man's destiny is guided. His health and comfort, aims and purposes, social standing and business prosperity; everything indeed that makes his life worth living may be affected by it in directions never dreamed of by the tailor who, if he does not actually make it, he is largely instrumental in making him what he is.

Between Girls.
"I haven't received a love letter from Jack in three days. I think it's a shame. I shall be positively ill unless I get a love letter by tomorrow." "Well, my dear," said the other girl, "if you need a love letter from Jack as badly as that, I have 40 or 50 I'll be glad to let you have."

Why is This?
When a woman misses a street car she laughs. When a man does the same thing he scowls. Why is this? Are women gamblers losers than men?

An Easy One.
Al De Mustard—Your wife's costume tonight is charming. It simply begs a description. Justin De Bunch—And that reminds me of a conundrum—why am I like description?
Natural Thought.
Eye—if I were to die would you marry again? Adam—How many ribs do you suppose a fellow can lose without coming to pieces?

A Success.
"Was your chaffing dish party a success?" "Great! We spoiled all the food early in the evening, and then went to a regular restaurant."

The Writer Who Does Most.
That writer does the most who gives his reader the most knowledge and takes from him the least time.—C. C. Colton.

Corrected.
Gentleman (engaging groom)—"Are you married?" Groom—"No, sir. I was thrown agin a barbed wire fence and took my face scratched."—London Tatler.

TURNED LEAVES OF ROMANCE

Vanity Found, and Others of Her Sin Have Done, That Man Was Ever Fickle.

"Will you have a cup of tea, Vandy?" said Mrs. Greene, as "Vandy" came in from hanging out the clothes. "Ah, don't say of Ah do, Mrs. Greene. It right col' on de roof an' Ah's mos' chill to de mawer ob mah bones. Yo's berry kin' as, yielding to Mrs. Greene's suggestion, she deposited her portly form on a chair near the kitchen table. "Yo's attus tryin' to make a puseon comfiable. Yo' min's me ob mah maw—o' coo' yo' ain't as ol' as her, but yo' like her in yo' manna. Oh, yes'm, Ah likes sugh in mah tea. "Wenever anybody ast me ef I like sugh in mah tea Ah tink ob a gamman fren' Ah was gaged to onct. "Ware he now? Lor, Ah dunno, he le' de city. He ain't no 'count no how an' Ah don't cayah ef he nevah come back. Der's jes' as good mest in de hash as eber come out ob it, Mrs. Greene. "Yo's his name? honey. His name Mistah Dobson, at dat time. He use come 'roun to mah house to take his afternoon tea wif an' mah. He mighty sweet on me den. Ah 'member one day he come an' 'maw, she po'd out a cup o' tea fo' him an' he taste it an' den he say mos' 'gratshatt' like, 'Mrs Vandy, would yo' min' puttin' yo' Hies sugh in mah tea—on'y de vo'y tip ob it?' "Wot yo' wan' me put mah sugh in yo' tea fo' Ah say, 'W'y, he say, 'yo' maw fo'got to put in de sugh an' I cayn drink tea 'less it bery sweet.' Now days," she concluded with a shake of her head, "he wouldn't drink his tea, Ah reckon, ef Ah was to put mah whole han' in."

Their Proper Place.
The folks who are perpetually protesting that their consciences are clear and that they have nothing for which to reproach themselves are generally in a bad way, for the probability is that their much-vaunted consciences have stopped working and are of no further use. Such people never allow that they are in the wrong; their favorite sentence is, "I told you so!" and their proper place is on a desert island with thick-skinned turtles for boon companions.

Pleasing Epigram.
"Great talents are of no use without a little sunshine of the mind"—thus wrote Lady Shelley of her friend Lord Brougham, who suffered from chronic disgust of life.—London Times.

Aim to Shed Joy.
The joy-maker is the most needed man in the world; the pain-maker is all too plentiful.

Still Believe in Witches.
There is a certain walnut tree near Boscoville, in Italy, around which the witches are said to gather on certain nights; and many a peasant of the Campagna believes that the witches assemble on midsummer nights and the ruins of the Roman Forum, where they turn themselves into huge black cats. As one proceeds east the superstitions of the ignorant thicken and multiply. India is full of supernatural traditions and fantasies.

Are Ever at War.
There are two things everlastingly at war, joy and pills. But Buckle's Arnica Salve will banish pills in any form. It soothes the itching, irritation, inflammation or swelling. It gives comfort, invites joy. Greatest healer of burns, boils, ulcers, cuts, bruises, eczema, scalds, pimples, skin eruptions. Only 25c at Barrington Pharmacy.

Useful Instrument in Farm House.
Every farm house should have a harness needle in it. One of the many uses to which the needle can be put is as a new rip in shoes that may save an extra trip to the cobbler's.—Home Department, National Magazine.

Nut-Picking Aid.
Place pecans in a pan, and pour boiling water over them; let them stay for a while, then crack. The meats can be easily removed from the shells.
