The story of Wilson's inauguration from the pen of George Clinton, our regular Washington correspondent, will be found in condense form on page two of the REVIEW. We also give in this issue the inaugural addresses of Wilson and Marshall and on page three is an interesting article on Wilson's cabinet, giving a short biography of each member, accompanied by photographs. Every bit of this matter is authentic and written in an interesting style.

It is condensed, but gives all It is condensed, but gives all the news without coloring it the news without coloring it after the fashion of large city dailies. Although all of our readers have probably read columns about the inauguration we know it will be worth their while to raview it in our accounts where we present the counts where we present the News in a Nur Shell
