As antique ring had been stolen from a jewsity tray in the case under my charge. Goldstein & Co. had acted promptly. I was notified that my services were no longer required. The senior parties of the firm took great pains to inform me that my disminsal carried with it no implication of personal dishonisty. There had been server, that an example of presumable carciesences must be made. Unfortunately they had begun with me.

If it had not been for the stenographer, Miss Lura Vesey, I think I should have packed up instanter to return to my native town, disquisted with jewelers in general and justly indignant at Goldstein & Co. After I had parted with several good friends arrested to find Miss Vesey at my side, just as I was leaving the place. She was in tears. She placed a sisterly, affectionate hand on my arm in a pleading, sympathetic way that softened me.

"You will not get discouraged" she said.

"Does it matter much?" I jerked out, still wroth at my summary dismissal.

"Does to me," the replied carriestic on my brother, too, Mr. Winthrop. You found him a good position, and he will be always grateful. If I can help you..."

But I shook my head dejectedly.
"At least let me hear how you get along," she added, and there was a tremor in her voice that inspired me with the idea that I had one sterling.

The customs of savage people make up in carious picturesqueness what they lack in dignity. Contrast, for instance, their everenoisid with the coronation of a British him or the induction of decident with son into office.

The king was absent from among the people by the effect, and he was more than the contract of the window. The ceremonies of his enthromemut were such that he required not only visdom, but also courses, physical strength and a superb digestion. The man's first initiation that he had been chosen by the elders was an oursak of the entire-most to do him honor, but to abuse and insult him in every possible way.
