port from all his party in the upper house is what the president needs because the Democratic majority there is not large.

Some of the Democratic senators who have leaned toward protection have, as their progressive brethern put it, been brought into line by presidential persuasion accompanied by a showing of framess. For a good and an experiment of the president in the senator of the president to be supported by it. Tinderwood and his committee on ways and means were of a kind to bring disaster to some of the home industries. Every possible argument personal, political and economical, was used to induce the president to recede a few steps, but the Democratic support of the first and that his bill, barring a political or a legislative catacitysm will beopels the actions finally have figured among themselves that they must have conord at any cost save that of future elections.

When Polsom was sent to the Philippiase he told Miss Peyris that he would have sensething twey important to write to her as soon as he had established himself. It was something which he could not say to her then be cause Ada Ferris was rich and Folsom had his way to make in the world. But when he looked into her eyes he knew that he would wait—that he was the had he would wait pears—perhape for over. It was lonely in Manlia, in spite of mon friends who took one out to dinner and whom one entertained at one's bachelor quarters. In fact John Folsom had only one real friend—Minnie, his little monkey, who had been captured, a tiny baby, in the forests of Modelance. Size was the tiniest and Modelance. Size was the tiniest and were seen. One deture that he had ever seen. One deture that he had ever seen.
