Do Animais Reason?
Incidents reported from the New York Zoological park would seem to indicate that certain animals can reason. When Carl Hagenbeck, the noted Hamburg animal trainer, visited the zoo not long ago he suddenly appeared near the cage of the big lion Sultan. This lion formerly lived in Hamburg, but Mr. Hagenbeck had not seen him for more than a year. Sultan him for more than a year. Sultan him for more than a year. Sultan him for more than a year. Hallagenbeck pronounced his mame in German the lion leaped up as if he german the lion leaped up as if he the biggest part of the job. Any handy boy will not find the sewing difficult to do himself, however. Resist to do himself, however. Resist to do himself, however. He was a superior of the himself to better it into the himself to better the himself to be the himself to be himself to the himself to be himself to the hims was taking a map, but when Mr. Hagenback pronounced his name in German the lion leaped up as if he had been aroused by a low and recognized his former trainer, and licked his hand. That the big orangeousng in the park has reasoning powers has been demonstrated. One day a rope where his hand tied it into a knot and fastened himself with it to his swing. The knot was a dexterously and as well tied as if gone by human hands.
