now, in regard to seed corn. It was only two years ago that we had one of the worst years for seed corn we have ever had, and all indications point to a year even worse. Be sure and hang on to your corn in as dry a place as possible, even after you have dried it out. Be sure it is dry and then keep it so, for corn once dried out will take on moisture again, and if not taken care of will freeze and harm the germ, resulting in a poor germination next year, and by all means test your corn next spring or more preferably test it this winter and next spring both.

Seed oats are very light this year. This means that a large proportion of your oats contain no berries, and are merely empty hulls, or that a certain portion of them, while they contain a berry, have such a weak germ that they will not produce the kind of plant that you are looking for next year.

In your spare time this winter, if you have a good fanning mill, grade the oats out and save only the best, brightest and heaviest seed for next spring. It will pay you. It is always well to remember that the seed determines what kind of a plant you are going to have, and in the end, of course, the yield. Do not plant weak seed, and this is an excellent time of the year from now on to look after this seed preparation.
