Why Has Not U. S. Congress Granted
Independence to the Filipinos?

By JAMES H. FREAR of Wisconsin, Speech in House.

Why has not the American Congress granted to the Philippine Islands their independence? The question has been asked repeatedly by the Filipinos, and exhibits have been filed wherein they furnish evidence that these islands, 10,000 miles from our coast, are governed with diffidence, intolerance, and racial conditions, have made the most wonderful development in all history; entitled to a fulfillment of our pledge.

The Philippine have 10,500,000 inhabitants in round numbers, 31 per cent of whom are deemed as Christians, with a complete form of stable government, maintained by official elections at popular elections, by a people 70 years of whom are able to read, write, according to accurate figures.

Before the Filipino fight, landed at Plymouth Rock the San Thomas university at Manila in the sixteenth century was graduating the Filipino students in the arts and sciences. A school enrollment of 884,000, without any compulsory attendance laws, carries its own argument of the extent of its educational progress, which includes the English language in every school.

Long before Spanish conquest of the islands, the misadventured Spanish were attempting the way to their knowledge and application of irrigation. In the subprovince of Iloga 2,000 miles of walls, 8 feet in height, long enough to reach nearly around the world, rise like giant steps up the side of steep mountain canyon to a total height of 5,000 feet and more—a colossal agricultural and engineering accomplishment. In view of comparative conditions, wars our own vaunted irrigation schemes.

Modern politicians, strictly enforcing legal regulations, a strong, practically universal religious training, a fast-shedding disposition on the part of the people, together with the absence of native police, all contribute toward the absence of riots and to obedience of law found among this people.

In the Light of the World War Crude
Marxism Wilts Into Absurdity.

By GREGORY ZILBOORG, in "Paging of the Old Order in Europe."

In order to be consistent, Marx had to deny the role of the individual in history. Refusing to recognize the cultural values of nationality, he was forced to reduce to a biological process. He completed himself by force the drive and motive force of ideas, and he thus eliminated agency as an independent factor from his system. He had to maintain that psychological conditions only arose passively from the interplay of economic forces and that they had no determinative power in themselves.

But in the light of the recent war crude Marxism wits into absurdity. The universal proletarian were not rational enough to be economic forces in either the Renaissance or the Marxian sense. Purely psychological conditions, such as the feeling of unity with the herd, the spirit of nationalism, the regulation of habit, caused the proletariat to jeopardize their class interests for the sake of a name against which they had long been, in ultimate individual opposition.

Individual ambition, too, swept away the economic arguments and played its part full in the march of events. The war magnified the brute forces of personality. The most economic man, the proletarian, was first of all a man!

Teachers' Pay Security Is Essential to Their Most Effective Work.

By CHARLES B. STILLMAN, President A. F. T.

Teachers feel that drastic security in their positions is essential to their most effective work. We do not, however, wish to put into ineffectual teachers—rather, we desire to rid the school system of incompetent. It is the competent teacher that we want to protect, and we feel that the public at large is hardly in sympathy with fair treatment to this teacher.

Under existing conditions, the teacher is constantly being harassed by arbitrary and autocratic school authorities, who dismiss at his pleasure and for no other reason without justification.

Teachers demand that their cases be tried before impartial boards, and they are entitled to have courts in which they be granted the right that they have from the trial board to the civil courts.

The teacher is one of the strongest stabilizing influences we have, but we cannot utilize this influence if the competent teacher is not kept in his position. Insecurity of tenure is driving many teachers out of the profession.

The 100 Per Cent American Speaks
Rights of Himself and of Others.

By WALTER CAMP, National Security League.

The 100 per cent American is a man who has respect for his own rights and the rights of others and will to order his life as to possess not only the courage but the strength to back up his own self.

Conscience is sufficiently powerful to preserve their qualities, which are dependent upon clear, strong bodies and capable minds.

He believes in education, patriotism, justice and loyalty. He believes in civil and religious liberty and in freedom of thought and speech, but he will not license which interferes with the rights of others.

He thinks courage and speech straight and thus conquers fear, slander and fear.

He believes in utilizing the dignity of labor, and with the education which makes democracy worth while and protective of the interests of all.
